Don't Steal Chickens.
Through Solid Iron.
How to Bring Back Bees.
Strange Club of Death.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

AT THE BOTTOM of a newspaper column, in one inch of printed space, you read that Judge Wyman has sentenced Cleneth Moffett of Wevertown, N. Y., to from four to six years at hard labor, in Dannemora State Prison.

Moffett stole 25 chickens from the Gisnon farm. If he had stolen a naval oil reserve or a railroad, he would be on his way to Europe, with able lawyers to prevent his being annoyed.

There is plenty of justice, in this land of equality for anybody foolish enough to steal chickens.

DR. COOLIDGE brilliant scientist of the General Electric Company, has taken a photograph, with X-rays, through four inches of solid iron. Dr. Coolidge used a tube with power of 900,000 volts, constructed by him.

Amazing, to our feeble minds, is the thought of rays making a photograph through solid iron. We know, but do not realize, that the atoms of iron are much farther apart in the "solid iron" in proportion to their diameters than the earth and moon.

PARTICLES of energy shot from the 900,000 volt tube at a speed of 186,000 miles a second, almost the speed of light, travel easily through the wide-open spaces in the iron.

Ignorance asks "of what use is such a 900,000 volt tube" and is told that the tube is now on its way to a New York hospital where it will be used to attack cancer tissue far inside the human body.

PUZZLED BY our "depression" public men examine other countries, in search of good suggestions.

In Russia, they find every man and woman, able to work, employed on full time, with workers from the outside invited.

That is puzzling. How do the Russians do it?

They observe also that in Russia, trade is active, everybody spends what he gets, almost as soon as he gets it. Capitalism, which means saving, is not encouraged, and wages are earned to be spent. The one difficulty is lack of commodities.

IN BRITAIN, the dole works badly, because it is, in fact, a subsidy for labor unions. A man on the dole is expected to find work if he can. But if he is a carpenter, bricklayer, or engineer, he will take work only at his own union trade, to preserve his union status. The labor government cannot object to this.

It is said that 100,000 men are on the dole, perhaps for life. They are coal miners, will only work at coal mining, and that industry is almost destroyed in Britain, as it is here.

If only there were in existence some of the ancient panaceas, to relieve calamities. You may read in Virgil's "Georgics" of a method to repopulate bee hives, when all the bees had died. It was a cruel prescription.

A young bullock, with his horns just sprouting, was led to a low building, with windows open to the four points of the compass. The poor creature was half suffocated, its nostrils stuffed, and it was beaten to death, care being taken not to break the hide. Pounded to a jelly it was left for several days. Then "winged things" flew out of all four windows. The simple-minded mistook for bees the flies, born of maggots, and thought the world's supply of honey would be forthcoming.

Some of our remedies for bringing back the honey bees of prosperity are not much more intelligent.

MISS LOUISE SCHAWARZ, 61 years old, of Nassau County, L. I., N. Y., held for the Grand Jury, accused of helping her brother, aged 69, to commit suicide, tells a strange story. A group of her friends, all past 55, formed a suicide club. When a member felt that his life had lost its value, because of illness, or failure, the other members would pray over him hours at a time. If that did not make him feel better, he would kill himself, or failing that, other members of the club killed him.

THEY PRAYED over Miss Schwarz's brother. He did not improve and was found dead. Whether he killed himself, or was killed, is uncertain. Miss Schwarz named four club members that had committed suicide and the police verified her story.

THE IDEA OF killing off the old, or forcing them to kill themselves, that shocks us, was once widespread.

Reclus, in his l'homme et la terre "Man and the earth" describes various methods of eliminating undesirable old people, among barbarians. In some cases they were killed and eaten by their relatives, who thought it a pity to "waste" them. In other cases they were abandoned to hunger and wild beasts, when the tribe moved on.

IN THE FAR north the aged man or woman was led into an ice hut, with only one opening and a little food. The opening was closed with a block of ice, and death soon came from suffocation.

And, the old people acquiesed in the custom, having done the same to others, when they were young.

There are unfortunately many old people, now dependent on cold charity, or colder relatives,

French Domination At Geneva Stirs England

By ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE
Universal Service Special Cable.

LONDON, May 16.—A solid phalanx of opinion is forming in Great Britain today in opposition to the League of Nations on the grounds that through the league Great Britain is losing her cherished sovereignty and the power to shape her own destiny.

Following the stand taken by Lord Beaverbrook, owner and publisher of the London Daily Express and other newspapers, the weekly journal The New Sthtesman today joined the battle against the dictatorial prerogatives assumed by the League of Nations.

Commenting on high-handed methods taken by the League to enforce its will, the paper declared today:

"If the League is to be real, it must end the state as we know it; end the armed state and end 'sovereignty,' which means in non-legal language the right to decide one's own cause and force one's will on other nations.

MENACE TO STATE

"The notion of ending the state in its historical sense is the very kernel of the League idea; acceptance of arbitration of foreigners and beginning of genuine disarmament — which are the immediate objectives of the League—can only be achieved if the League is a genuine menace to the state.

Taking up the thread of the attack on the League's policy in The New Statesman, the Daily Express declares editorially today:

"In other words, Britain has blotted out her historical identity and merged in some fantastic, nebulous world state.

"Her sovereignty is gone: her power to shape her own destinies

Youth Rescues Another From Beneath Train

Eddie Leydig.

Newsboy Grasps Victim Crawling to Rails While Stunned

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 16.—Stunned by a fall from a freight train at the Baltimore and Ohio depot in Fairchance, near here today, Paul Sheets, 18, of Hoywood, was crawling under the wheels when dragged to safety by Eddie Leydig, 12, a newsboy.

The fall so dazed Sheets that instead of crawling away from the train, he stumbled toward the track. One hand was within a foot of the rails when Eddie grabbed him by the leg and drew him to safety.

Sheets was taken to the office of Dr. E. T. Greutzner, and later to the Uniontown Hospital. His injuries are not considered serious. Eddie said:

"It wasn't anything at all. I just saw a chance to grab him by the leg as he had one hand raised to place on the rail."

Persons who witnessed the rescue say Eddie had to lie flat on the cinders to rescue the older lad.

GIRL KILLED, 3 HURT AS AUTOS CRASH HEAD-ON

Wilkinsburg Man Dragged From Burning Car; Young Woman Taken to Hospital.

NEW ALEXANDRIA, Pa., May 17.—A girl was killed and a girl companion and two Wilkinsburg men were injured last night in a headon collision on the William Penn highway, between this place and Delmont.

Rosemma McTigue, 18, of Nanty-Glo, was killed instantly. Her companion, Mildren Altemun, 18, also of Nant-y-Glo, suffered only slight injuries. The Wilkinsburg victims are Emmett D. and Harry Wood, brothers, of 463 Ella street.

Emmett, 28, was burned ago suffered injuries to his head. His condition is serious. Harry, 24, received minor injuries to his head and face and cuts on the hands. In his delirium, he kept calling for his wife who, with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Emmett Wood, awaited word of the mishap at Columbia Hospital at Wilkinsburg. They had been notified of the accident by a passing motorist.

The Wood brothers were driving east along the highway when they collided with the machine occupied by the girls. The Wood machine caught fire and the elder brother was severely burned before passersby could drag him out of the wrecked machine. The three were taken to Greensburg Hospital.

Mrs. Emmett D. Wood and her sister-in-law left for Greensburg soon after learning where their injured husbands had been taken.

Blaze in Capitol Put Out Quickly

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—Firemen tonight quickly extinguished a small blaze in the north wing of the Capitol. The private alarm box in the Senate wing was sounded, drawing four engine and two truck companies to the scene. Extinguishing the blaze was but a matter of a few minutes.

The fire recalled the spectacular blaze of early last year, which shrouded the Capitol dome in smoke and flames. The fire tonight was in the basement room used as a janitor's storeroom.

1ST INTERVIEW REVEALS KLINE STILL SICK MAN

Mayor, Ravaged by Illness, Hopes to Return to Desk Soon as Health Permits.

By JACK HOLLISTER,
Staff Correspondent.

GENEVA, O., May 16.—Mayor Charles H. Kline still is a sick man.

He has been here for three days, resting at a hotel while his wife supervises preparation of the Kline cottage at Madison Golf Lakelands, on the lake front, five miles from here, for the summer season.

ENJOYING HIMSELF

In the first interview secured from the Mayor since he was stricken several weeks ago, he said today:

"I didn't really come here for a rest. I just came for the change while Mrs. Kline is getting the cottage in shape. I felt I needed the change after my long stay in the hospital. The air here is wonderfully recuperating and I have been enjoying myself thoroughly."

Asked about his plans for the summer, he continued:

"I haven't made any plans for my convalescence yet. I want to get back to work as soon as possible, but my health comes first.

"I guess it's that way with everybody. No matter how pressing their work may be, they put their health first in a case like this."

SHOWS SCARS OF ILLNESS

The Mayor plainly shows the ravages of his illness caused when three malignant carbuncles confined him to St. Francis Hospital in Pittsburgh for five weeks.

Three large cuts on the back of his neck, slightly to the left, are mute testimony of the surgeons' drastic action. Small dressings still are kept on two of them.

The Mayor laid a finger cautiously on one of the dressings. He said:

"Just look at that hole. Big enough for a hen to lay an egg

Derby Run, Won But Not by Nag With Bugs' Bet

—By Arthur 'Bugs' Baer—

LOUISVILLE, May 16.—The big Derby has been won and run. But not by the hoss I bet on. He just ran.

We had $30 on Sneeze Powders three ways across the board.

So Sneeze Powders ran three ways across the track.

The trouble was with that new fangled starting gate. It has gates and steps on it, and Sneeze Powders ran upstairs.

Then when the other hosses scrammed around the dish, old Sneeze Powders decided to sit out that dance.

We should have known better than to bet on Sneezy because he was a hot tip given to us by Damon Runyon, Ray Long and Bernard Gimbel.

The weather was beautiful, but Sneeze Powders didn't seem to know it. It was an ideal day for a race, but Sneezy thought it was postponed. The sun was shining and people were cheering, but not for Sneeze Powders.

We admit that Sneeze Powders is a mudder. He never had a father. Three other hosses were scratched because the track was fast. That's the kind of hoss Sneezy is.

Too lazy to scratch himself.

Twenty Grand Wins Derby, Setting New Track Record; Sweep All 2nd, Mate Third

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 16—Twenty Grand, the mighty 3-year-old belonging to Mrs. Payne Whitney, won the Kentucky Derby of 1931 this afternoon in record-breaking time.

Sweep All, from the stable of Charles Fisher, the auto body builder, was second, and Mate, conqueror of Twenty Grand in the Preakness, a week ago, was third.

PITTSBURGHER SEVENTH

Spanish Play finished fourth; Boys Howdy, fifth; Insco, sixth; Pittsburgher, seventh; The Mongol, eighth; Ladder, ninth; Anchors Aweigh, tenth; Surf Board, eleventh, and Prince d'Amour twelfth.

Pittsburgher, owned by a Pittsburgher, Theodore E. Mueller, and one of the hopes of the West, began slowly, met early interference and was never a factor.

Twenty Grand paid $3.76 to win, $3 to place and $2.60 to show. The place price on Sweep All was $15.58, with $7.60 to show. Mate paid the show price of $3.62.

The time was 2:01 4-5, the fastest Derby ever run. Old Rosebud held the previous record at 2:03 1-5. That's how good Twenty Grand was today.

Coupled with Surf Board and Anchors Aweigh as the entry of the Greentree Stable, Twenty Grand was 9 to 10 at post time, with Mate second choice.

LAST AT START

Twenty Grand was literally running away from his field at the finish. He won by four lengths, with Sweep All about the same distance ahead of Mate, which was just staggering home.

From a start that sent the field of 20 horses away in the $50,000 stake in a perfect line, Twenty Grand was next to last passing the grandstand the first time, with 50,000 men and women yelling in unison. A gray thing called Prince D'Amour, belonging to Joe Leiter, of Chicago, which finally wound up last, was setting the pace.

Going around the first turn, Twenty Grand was still away, with his jockey, Charley Kurtzinger, sitting quietly, in his saddle. He was still next to last going into the backstretch, and then Kurtzinger began driving him forward.

Once it looked as if Kurtzinger had run his horse into a tight pocket back there, but Twenty Grand quickly got in the clear. The gray horse was still doing a lot of running, with Spanish Play, New Orleans stake winner, fighting at him, and Sweep All close up.

FINISHES WITH RUSH

Now Kurtzinger, on Twenty Grand, began making up ground, and the long-legged horse was running past other horses as if they were tied to hitching posts. Mate, with Georgie Ellis on his back, was lying pretty well back,

NAUTILUS SOON TO START NORTH

NEW LONDON, Conn., May 16.—(INS.)—In another week, it was estimated here today, the Nautilus, submarine in which Sir Hubert Wilkins plans to reach the North Pole, will be on its way to the Arctic regions.

The submarine was taking on 8,258 gallons of fuel oil at a wharf here today. The craft probably will be kept at its wharf here until Wednesday or Thursday of next week, when it will head for Provincetown, Mass. Over a measured course off Provincetown the submarine will be put through its final tests before heading for the North.

It is not thought that more than a day or two will be required at Provincetown, and from here the Nautilus will go to Halifax, where the last of supplies for the Arctic trip will be taken aboard.

Special Morgan Train Gives Italy Thrill

MILAN, Italy, May 16.—(AP.)—When J. P. Morgan, American capitalist, ordered a special train from Trieste to Domodossola on the French frontier recently, he created enough surprise throughout Italy to warrant half-column stories in the newspapers. The trip cost him $500.

Italy is accustomed to seeing private trains used only by the King and Queen and members of the royal family.

Pantages Seeking Separate Trial

SAN DIEGO, Cal., May 16.—(INS.)—A rift among Alexander Pantages, wealthy showman; Jesse H. Shreve and John P. Mills, rich co-defendants in the Hollywood "girl mart" case, was evident today when Pantages and Shreve, asked separate trials.

Their action followed the surprise act of Mills yesterday in changing his plea from not guilty to guilty on one count of contributing to the deliquency of girls.

'Jiggs' Kentucky Colonel; Governor Honors M'Manus

Universal Service.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 16.—George McManus, cartoonist and creator of Jiggs and Maggie, was made an aide de camp of the Governor of Kentucky today and given the rank and authority of a Kentucky colonel.

He was formally commissioned by Gov. Flem D. Sampson in a ceremony in front of the clubhouse of Churchill Downs, just before the running of the Derby.

The Governor said he was conferring the commission in recognition of the happiness McManus had brought to the people of Kentucky and of the world through his "Bringing Up Father" cartoons.

Col. McManus in his reply of thanks asked the Governor if his new authority gave him power to order the shooting of all cartoonists.

After the Derby Col. McManus was guest of honor of the Governor at a supper served in the clubhouse.

Pinchot Assails Public Utilities 'Spies' as He Ends Stumping Tour

PEOPLE BEHIND HIM IN BATTLE, GOVERNOR SAYS

Concludes Swing of 13 Counties With Speech at Bellefonte; Scores Senator.

BELLEFONTE, Pa., May 16 (AP.)—Concluding his stumping tour of the state to arouse public sentiment for the administration "fair rate" utilities program, Gov. Gifford Pinchot said in an address here tonight that "spies of the public utilities magnates have been following me and reporting my talks to their masters."

The Governor said the sentiment of the people was "unmistakably and overwhelmingly" in favor of a square deal through proper regulation of public utilities corporations.

He said his tour of 13 counties in the last two weeks had convinced him that he had the people on his side, adding:

"If the scouts of the public service utilities magnates who have been taking down my speeches in shorthand have any judgment whatever concerning the growth and the state of public opinion, if they are able to estimate in any degree the situation they faced, they have been reporting to their masters in New York and Chicago that the people of Pennsylvania are awake at last."

WARNS UTILITIES

He added that when the people begin to move it will be wise for the men who have been oppressing them to stand out of the way, adding:

"When you go into the home county of a senator who has betrayed his people and tell the truth about him, and find the sentiment of the meeting unanimously against him on a show of hands, it means that the basis for action is already laid."

The Governor told the people in the Center-Clearfield district that Senator Harry B. Scott had promised him his support in putting through the administration utilities program. Scott has opposed the Governor on other matters and his vote was cast for Augustus P. Dlaix for president pro tem of the Senate, Pinchot continued:

"He was absolutely wrong in his vote for Daix, but that doesn't mean he shouldn't go right on this issue."

BILLS 'PICKED'

When the Governor left Harrisburg last week to carry his fight into the bailiwicks of senators whose antagonism he knew or sensed, the Senate Judiciary General Committee, which held the three bills ripping out the Public Service Commission and creating a fair rate board, had not acted on the measures and the executive waged a campaign for their enaction into law.

Last Tuesday the committee "pickled" the bills and since then the Governor has spurred support for the Howell bill, passed by the Senate. This measure, as amended in the House, would give the executive the power to hire and fire public service commissioners.

Passage of this bill, the Governor said, is better than "no relief at all from the gouging, grasping, over-charging public utilities."

He served notice that if the Howell bill is not enacted and he anticipated much opposition to it when it gets to the Senate again, he would call a special session of the Legislature in the spring to deal with the fair rate matter.

The members notified their governments the reduction was necessary "to secure a fair and reasonable equilibrium between consumption and production."

The decrease is 15.9 per cent of the present quota.

that could almost envy such an ending.

DR. VILLINGER, who will accompany the Wilkins North Pole submarine expedition as physician in charge, says a submarine Arctic journey is safest. And if regular North Pole trips can be made under the ice that will make possible the establishment of Arctic meteorological stations, quite "absolutely necessary for the weather services of the greater part of Europe."

THE SUBMARINE carries periscopes arranged to deal with ice conditions, are most interesting, a powerful steel augur operated from inside the submarine, pointing upward and able to bore through 100 feet of ice.

To know that 100 feet of ice separates you from the upper air, must induce a creepy feeling. And what if currents should carry the submarine away, breaking off the ice boring augur? Such an exhibition calls for good nerves.

PIERCE FIRM GETS OTIS UNIT

NEW YORK, May 16.—(AP.)—Otis & Co., large investment banking house, announced today that its brokerage business in Denver was being taken over by E. A. Pierce & Co., and that it would continue its investment banking business in that city.

It was explained that the change represented merely an incident in the general transfer of the firm's stock brokerage business to the Pierce firm, which was announced three weeks ago. A report that Otis & Co. would discontinue its Denver office was denied by Ferdinand Eberstadt, a New York partner. The announcement three weeks ago explained that the firm was discontinuing its brokerage business to specialize in investment banking.

BULLET HALTS STEER RAMPAGE

An infuriated steer which crashed through a brick wall and a board fence, and then swam halfway across the Allegheny river was shot after a three-hour chase through Millvale yesterday afternoon.

The steer, which was about to be killed in the Fred W. Smalstig abbatoir in Millvale, had been hit on the head in an attempt to stun it. The animal broke away, smashed through a brick wall and a board fence to freedom.

With most of the younger population of the district at his heels, the steer roved over most of the district, dove into the Allegheny river near the Fortieth street bridge, and swam halfway across and back before he was captured. Police shot the animal.

BERLIN-SOVIET TREATY DRAWN

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND
Universal Service Special Cable

GENEVA, May 16.—Germany and Soviet Russia today are about to sign a new treaty, one which probably bars war or financial boycotts concerning the two nations.

While the fate of the Austro-German customs union is in the balance and the battle over the legal right to conclude such a pact comes from behind closed doors into the open before the League of Nations Council Monday, preparations are quietly going on between Berlin and Moscow to redraft and renew the so-called Berlin treaty between Germany and Russia, which is expiring.

The treaty is, in effect, a renewal of the Rapallo treaty signing which, at the Genoa conference of 1922, created a tremendous sensation.

It is learned from well-informed Russian and German circles that the treaty was practically completed before Foreign Minister Curtius left Berlin for Geneva.

PARIS, May 16.—(AP.)—Gold Star Mothers from the United States visited the Cathedral of Notre Dame this morning and this afternoon went to Versailles. Tomorrow and Monday they will visit the cemeteries where their soldier sons are buried. Mrs. J. MacAbee, of Baltimore, was sent to the American Hospital today with a slight attack of facial erysipelis.

Asheville Banker Guilty of Fraud

ASHEVILLE, N. C., May 16.—(AP.)—Wallace B. Davis, former president of the defunct Central Bank and Trust Company, was convicted by a jury here today of making a false report of the bank's condition and publishing it with intent to deceive the public. Dr. J. A. Sinclair and C. N. Brown, former directors, who were co-defendants, were acquitted.

Police Radio Cars Make First Arrest

Pittsburgh's police radio scouts made their first arrest last night.

Driver John Whalen and Patrolman James Lynn arrested two men whom they alleged were getting out of an automobile two hours after the machine was reported stolen, in a radio flash broadcast. The men gave their names as Stanley Lally, 30, of 343 Semple street, and Thomas Kearns, 31, of 511½ Girty street.

BRITONS PRESS FIGHT ON LEAGUE

has been taken from her; her interests are placed in the keeping of foreigners, and her whole scheme of existence is regulated for her from the outside—is there a single Briton with any patriotism or sense of realities who will not turn in disgust from such a mushy and spineless ideal?"

PEACE CAUSE LOSING

J. L. Garvin, editor of the Sunday Observer, in an editorial tomorrow, will say:

"The whole world, America included, must awaken to one fact—the cause of peace is drifting backwards.

"Many recent events have thrown a glaring light on the realities and profoundly disquieted every responsible mind. Twelve years after the peace treaties and the signing of the League covenant, full equality between nations within the League is forbidden by a dominant section."

While pointing out that the League has done little or nothing at Geneva in the way of disarmament, the Express declared that France, the nation dominating the League, is today the most powerful military machine the world has ever seen.

Britain's War On Geneva Aids U. S. Foes of Court

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(Universal.)—British antagonism to the League of Nations, so powerfully expressed by Lord Beaverbrook, dealt a staggering blow today to the campaign to put this country into the League Court.

Beaverbrook's expose of the League's machinations confirmed the views of those senators who have been fighting for over a decade to keep this country out of European entanglements.

Throughout the long fight, Senators Borah, of Idaho; Johnson, of California; Moses, of New Hampshire, and other Court foes, have insisted that the League was a breeder of war instead of an aid to peace. The revelations of the English publisher showed that British public opinion is now aroused to this fact.

INTERNATIONALIST BLOW

The waning prestige of the League in Europe during the past several months has proved a severe setback to the international organizations which are carrying on a nation-wide campaign in favor of American adherence to the League Court. As conditions stand now, it is conceded the court foes have better than an even chance to defeat ratification if the Court protocols come before the Senate this fall.

EXTRA SESSION TO AID JOBLESS SEEN BY HOOPES

Assemblyman Charges State Dodges Relief; Talks Here For Indemnity Measure.

Representative Darlington Hoopes, author of the unemployment indemnity bill, defeated in the House recently, yesterday predicted an extra session of the State Legislature to consider relief legislation for the unemployed.

Hoopes is in Pittsburgh to address a mass-meeting in Moose Temple today, announced as a demonstration against continued failure of industrial and business leaders to relieve unemployment.

"NO RELIEF GIVEN"

He said:

"If, as the Governor now indicates, the people of Pennsylvania must be content with half a loaf on the public utilities issue, they can probably survive. But without even the crumbs of unemployment relief, thousands face actual physical destruction.

"In spite of the Governor and the majority of both houses of the Assembly, I expect to attend a special session of the Pennsylvania Legislature long before the time set for a new Assembly's election. Nevertheless, the total failure of this session to act may well be reflected in fateful events in the coming year."

FATHER COX TO SPEAK

The meeting has been sponsored by 75 labor unions, fraternal organizations and branches of the Socialist party. It has also been indorsed by the Pittsburgh Central Labor Union. The Rev. Father James R. Cox, of old St. Patrick's Church, will also speak.

Girl Charged With Attempt to Murder

LEBANON, Tenn., May 16.—(AP.)—Miss Vera Castillo, 18, of Tampa, Fla., was charged today with an attempt to commit murder in shooting Joe Avellanal, 27, scion of a wealthy Cuban family, in his apartment here yesterday.

Meanwhile, Avellanal, against whom Chief of Police R. P. Gann said charges of violating the Mann act and the narcotic laws had been placed, remained in jail. The girl was at the police station, but was not placed in a cell.

Avellanal is secretary to Judge W. R. Chambers, dean of the Cumberland University Law School.

Submarine Tender Disabled in Storm

SHANGHAI, May 16.—(INS.)—The American submarine tender Canopus was disabled today in a severe storm off the Chinese coast. The ship was expected to reach port here under tow tomorrow.

The Canopus, a vessel of 8,000 tons, carries a complement of 317 men. She was launched in 1919.

Store Manager's 'Bandit' Merely Officer in Muff

On his guard against chain store robbers, according to Police Sergt. A. F. Heineman, of Oakland Police Station, Manager Morris Rosen, of the Atlantic and Pacific store at Atwood and Bates streets, wasn't taking any chances when he saw a stranger enter his store late last night, carrying a revolver in his hip pocket.

Rosen slipped out the back door as the stranger started to give a long grocery list to a clerk, and notified Sergt. Heineman. Heineman dispatched the patrol wagon and scout car to the scene of the expected holdup.

As the police entered the store the stranger turned toward them in surprise. He was Patrolman Michael O'Donnell, doing his Saturday marketing. He had forgotten to leave his revolver at home.

EX-TECH GANG VICTIM BURIED

NEW YORK, May 16.—(INS.)—None came today to mourn for Roy Sloane, who learned the law in Sing Sing.

Only his mother, his lawyer and the minister of his church saw him before the coffin lid closed forever on his slim and youthful body, stilled forever by the bullets of gangsters.

There were two floral tributes on his casket, a mean and ill-designed funeral box, in the chapel where last words were said for the dead. There was a blanket of roses from Mrs. Anna Sloane, the chief mourner, and a wreath marked simply "From Friends."

Sloane, who took courses at Carnegie Tech and Columbia University before he was sentenced to Sing Sing for automobile theft, won his release after three years by his own brilliant argument. Last February he was arrested in connection with an $8,000 jewelry holdup.

He was mowed down by bullets from an automobile as he stepped from the Mad Dot Boat Club, where he drank several hours before his death.

Mitten Prosecutor Quits City Office

PHILADELPHIA, May 16.—(AP.)—Deputy Controller S. Davis Wilson, who prosecuted the suit of the controller of the city of Philadelphia which this week resulted in the ousting of Mitten Management, Inc., from the management of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, today resigned from the controller's office. Wilson, it was said, desires to give all his time to his law practice.

Senator Swanson Fully Recovered

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—Dr. W. M. Sprigg, physician attending Senator Claude A. Swanson, of Virginia, said today his patient had "completely recovered" from an attack of indigestion yesterday. Dr. Sprigg also cabled Mrs. Swanson, who is in France, that her husband's illness was not serious.

CLARK FORGETS CLUB PERMIT

The Club Alabam has been operating without a police permit, according to Director James M. Clark, of the Department of Public Safety.

This was in answer to a query whether the club's permit would be revoked as result of the seizure of liquors by prohibition agents during a raid there early Friday.

Records reveal, however, that Director Clark issued a police permit to Joe Rubin, of the Club Alabam, a Hill district night club, on February 27, 1931, two months after it had been closed by the Director for violating the 1 a. m. closing ordinance on New Year's eve.

Clark said:

"It's nothing but a low dive—it'll get no more permits."

A raid was made upon the Silver Slipper, a North Side resort at the same time the Club Alabam was raided. Its license also has been revoked, Clark said, and will not be reissued. He said:

"If these two places stage dances or shows again, somebody is going to be suspended."

EX-FIRE RANGER GOES ON TRIAL

John A. Schulkins, 31, of 7819½ Hamilton avenue, former state fire ranger, arrested while recovering from a bullet wound in a lonely cabin hideout near Spruce Creek, Pa., is to be placed on trial Monday in Criminal Court charged with shooting to death of William A. McClintock, 36, 7924 Susquehanna street, a garage watchman, last February 22.

Schulkins was apprehended through police tracing the number on a revolver he had dropped, and finding it had been sold to Schulkins by James I. Davis, a Wilkinsburg dealer.

After determining that Schulkins had owned the gun, police traced him to the home of a relative in Elkton, O., where it is said his wound had been treated, and from there to the cabin near Spruce Creek, in the district where Schulkins had once worked as a fire ranger.

Wanted in Theft Of Wife's Auto

A warrant was issued yesterday for the arrest of William Cothery, 36, of 2210 Woodstock avenue, Swissvale, charging him with the theft of his wife's automobile. Cothery, police say, disappeared Friday night.

The warrant was issued by Justice of the Peace Ralph Knisley, of Swissvale, on information from Police Chief William Campbell.

Pershing Contest Winners to Be Announced Soon

The checking of the answers to the 10 questions in the Sun-Telegraph Pershing contest has been completed. It has been a long and tedious task, necessarily so on account of the care that had to be exercised in the examination. It required a check and a recheck. The judges are now working on the letters and it is hoped that the list of winners will be ready within the next two weeks —possibly for publication in the Sunday Sun-Telegraph two weeks from today.

DIVORCE GIVEN TO WIFE NO. 2

Mrs. Mary Harbaugh, of 421 North Highland avenue, seeking a divorce from Charles E. Harbaugh, of 302 Journal street, testifying in Common Pleas Court, said:

"A woman called me on the phone and told me she was married to my husband. I called upon her and she recognized his picture."

The divorce was granted by Judge Elder W. Marshall. The Harbaughs were married September 26, 1929, and two months later, according to the testimony of Mrs. Harbaugh, she learned that her husband had married Nellie Smith, June 20, 1922. They were never divorced. Harbaugh admitted this to her, Mrs. Harbaugh testified.

Moonshine, Stills Seized in 3 Raids

Prohibition agents and constables yesterday made a raid in North Winebiddle avenue, where they reported seizing 440 bottles of home brew, 10 gallons of mash and two gallons of whisky. A 50-gallon still and 50 gallons of moonshine were reported seized in a raid in Belasco street, and a 10-gallon still and 10 gallons of whisky were confiscated in Highland avenue, McKees Rocks, according to the agents.

FEE ON VENDING MACHINES TO BE ENFORCED

Schooley Starts Drive Tomorrow to Collect $1 on 15,000 to 25,000 Devices.

City Treasurer Roy D. Schooley's drive to force collection of a license fee of $1 each from all commercial vending machines here will start tomorrow with the co-operation of Inspector James Bailey, of the Bureau of Weights and Measures.

A search through legislation disclosed, Schooley said, each machine must have a license. Penalty for refusal to pay is a fine of $10. A more or less haphazard attempt to collect has been made in the past, Schooley said he was informed, adding:

"I am going to take this matter into my own hands. I am sure there are at least 15,000 commercial vending machines here. There may be 25,000. Consider the revenue being lost by not collecting."

Bailey told Schooley he would assign eight men to collect.

It was pointed out that the drive was not an attempt to work a hardship on small storekeepers and businessmen.

Schooley said:

"An investigation shows that nearly all the machines are owned, operated and installed by outside manufacturing concerns. The storekeeper is given a percentage of profits. I am considering whether I'll ask Council to amend the ordinance to provide an increased fee, of say, $2, $3 or $4."

Machines taxable include those used to vend cigarets, candy, peanuts, sandwiches, as well as electric phonographs and pianos operated for profit.

Flees Bullets, Taken in Chase

Ambridge police are holding Jack Squires, 22, of 179 Beaver street, Leetsdale, arrested yesterday after a thrilling chase during which pursuers fired a number of shots and the fugitive led them into a warehouse, through a skylight and over a roof into a railroad yard.

Squires is accused of the robbery of a poolroom at 826 Merchant street, Ambridge. He was found in the vicinity by Patrolman Dick O'Neil. He had a revolver, police say, but did not use it.

Loan Extortion Trial Date Set

District Attorney Andrew T. Park has set May 25 for trial of Charles O. Dorsett, 309 Frankford street, West View, indicted for extortion in an alleged attempt to levy blackmail on the Fulton Loan Company and the Daily Loan Company, on charges preferred by George H. Slain, of the State Banking Department. Charles Jennings and John A. Hassenauer are listed for trial at the same time, indicted for violation of the small loan law, it being alleged they charged more than the legal 3½ per cent a month interest.

SPEEDING HELD RESPONSIBLE IN AUTO TOLL GAIN

State Report Shows 153 Killed in April; Reckless Driving Also to Blame.

Speeding and reckless driving of privately owned automobiles on open highways was the chief cause of an increase of 19 per cent in motor vehicle fatalities in Pennsylvania during April, officers of the Pittsburgh Motor Club said yesterday.

A total of 153 persons were killed in this state last month, an increase of 30 over March and an increase of 21 over April of last year.

Accidents last month caused approximately $478,000 in damages to motor vehicles and other property, the Motor Club estimated from official reports issued by the Bureau of Motor Vehicles. This is an increase of approximately 30 per cent over March The reports show that 3,250 persons were injured in this state last month in a total of 3,740 accidents involving motor cars.

Pedestrian injuries and deaths and other accidents in cities and towns were not so serious as during April of 1930, indicating that a new wave of carelessness on the open highways is causing higher accident tolls in Pennsylvania, the club pointed out. A sharp increase is noted in collisions of motor vehicles and collisions of cars with fixed objects along the highways.

The number of deaths caused by automobiles running off the highways doubled the figure for April of 1930, it was stated.

ARTIST POISON PROOF SOUGHT

X-ray photographs were being studied at West Penn Hospital last night in an attempt to determine if Hubert Stowitts, artist, is suffering from a strange Javanese poison or from kidney disease.

Stowitts, admitted to the hospital Friday, said he believes he was ill of poison received while banqueting with King Manku Nagoro, of Solo, Java. He said he may have been poisoned because of his refusal to oblige the King by making copies of his paintings of court actors and Manku's queen. Stowitts is to have an exhibition of his paintings at Carnegie Museum beginning June 7.

Gypsy Seeress Fails to Foresee Own Misfortune

Had Angelina Marks, 43, of Jamestown, N. D., accused as a fortune teller, been able to foresee her own future, she might have escaped a lot of trouble. But she was not so gifted.

Predicting to a woman client she was carrying a heavy burden and was going to have a lot of trouble, Police Lieut. Hugh Lavery and Precinct Detective Jack Dillon declared, they entered her establishment at 624 Wylie avenue and placed her under arrest. Arrested with Mrs. Marks was her husband, Peter, 48. Their two-year-old child, the youngest of seven, was turned over to welfare workers.

Mrs. Marks told police she was a member of a band of gypsies driven out of Pitcairn a week ago. Leaving the caravan and her other children, according to the authorities, she decided to enter business in Pittsburgh, and had been operating a week.

U. S. Road Program Ahead of Schedule

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—The federal aid highway construction program—accelerated to aid the jobless—is now more than 11 weeks ahead of the 1930 schedule.

The total cost of projects approved by the Bureau of Public Roads to May 1 was $211,961,000, representing $98,060,000 in federal aid money, $68,140,000 in emergency funds appropriated by Congress and $45,761,000 of state money.

TOWN HALL SITE HEARING LISTED FOR TOMORROW

Score of Home Owners Ask Injunction, Alleging Irregularities In Sale.

Hearing on the equity action of Schenley Farms taxpayers seeking to restrain the County Commissioners and other county officials from purchasing the Nicola site for the Town Hall is listed for tomorrow in Common Pleas Court.

More than a score of Schenley Farms home owners and representatives of the Masonic Temple, Syria Mosque and the Ruskin Apartments asked an injunction, alleging that to contract of purchase is required by law to be advertised under competitive requirements when involving more than $300, that the commissioners abused the discretion allowed them, that the price of $8 a square foot is excessive and that the Town Hall would depreciate other property and cause traffic congestion.

The site is inadequate and inaccessible and lacks proper facilities, the suit alleged.

Commissioner C. C. McGovern virtually admitted all the allegations and strengthened the arguments of complainants by his separate answer. Commissioners Joseph G. Armstrong and E. V. Babcock denied the major allegations in their answer.

VETS' LOTTERY ON DERBY FAILS

ST. LOUIS, May 16.—(AP.)—Postoffice inspectors today were investigating the operation and collapse of the Kentucky Derby Sweepstakes, sponsored by the Disabled Veterans' Association of Phoenix, Ariz., which is reported to have sold about 20,000 "associate memberships" in St. Louis at $1 each.

Inquiry by the Post Dispatch at Phoenix today disclosed only $7,000 had been received for 7,000 membership tickets, whereas the promoters had distributed 500,000 to agents in various parts of the country.

A spokesman for the Arizona organization said the promoters had no idea how many tickets were sold and presumed much of the money had been retained by ticket sellers.

Had No Trouble Wife Says, but Divorces Mate

The court asked:

"What caused the separation?"

"No trouble at all."

"You never had any trouble? That is unusual."

"Yes, it is unusual."

Dr. Partos, president of a drug store company, was taken from his luxurious Central Park West apartment to face the charge. The complainant is Teresa Pechy. She said she gave Partos money to invest on his representation that his stores were making enough to pay 7 per cent on common stock.

Recent losses to investors in the doctor's enterprises were estimated at more than $6,000,000.

ECONOMY TOPIC IN HOOVER CAMP

ORANGE, Va., May 16.—(AP.)—President Hoover began a series of conferences with Interior Department officials at his Rapidan camp today, the second of a group of meetings to be held with department heads during the summer looking to government economies.

Neither the President nor the Interior Department officials expected to find many ways to effect savings in that government branch.

Mr. Hoover arrived at his camp shortly before lunch time after a leisurely trip from Washington. He left the White House about an hour after his regular scheduled time because of a prolonged medicine ball game.

The Interior Department appropriation for the fiscal year of 1932 which begins on July 1 is about $15,000,000 more than when Mr. Hoover took office. The $15,000,000 represents an increase in the Indian Bureau appropriation and appropriations for public works such as Boulder Dam.

A MESSAGE TO AUTOMOBILE DEALERS

Don't Be Left Behind!

Some cars have Constant Mesh—
Some cars have Silent Mesh—
Some cars have Free Wheeling—
Only Auburn offers All Three

Dealers must face the issue. The Public wants Free Wheeling and is going to have it. Just as the public quickly and permanently accepted self starters and four wheel brakes. Suppose you were not a dealer, would you invest your money today in a new car without Free Wheeling?—knowing it would soon become obsolete?—and have its trade in value greatly depreciated?

Many people think the main advantages of Free Wheeling are the savings of fuel and the absence of strains on the car when coasting on momentum. If that were all, you could coast with the clutch down, or with shifting lever in neutral with Silent Mesh. The main reason Free Wheeling has come to stay is the fact that the driver can shift gears easily, and quickly, without using the clutch. Women especially appreciate this convenience IN TRAFFIC.

One of the EXCLUSIVE improvements in Auburn's Free Wheeling is the lockout lever. It lets you drive completely in Free Wheeling or completely in positive gear; no need to continually change back and forth between the two.

And that's not all. Free Wheeling itself is only part of the transmission improvements the new Auburn cars offer. We believe Silent Mesh is equally important. Auburn is the only car with Constant Mesh, and Silent Mesh and Free Wheeling. It is this exclusive combination of all these three advancements that puts the Auburn so far ahead.

BUT—Auburn never has "put all its eggs in one basket." The value of any automobile can not be measured by any one single feature or unit. It's how good and modern the whole car is that counts.

At next year's automobile shows watch how many cars copy the X-type frame, which Auburn introduced this year. Today's new Auburn is just as far ahead in its twist-proof X-frame as it is in Free Wheeling improvements. And that's not all; consider Auburn's 98 H. P. Straight Eight, perfected after seven years' experience; its automatic chassis lubrication; its widest doors; widest seats; no metal-to-metal contacts; and its insulated bodies and you will find that in every part it is as advanced and improved as in its Free Wheeling.

We claim that Auburn offers the greatest value on the market today, in EVERY respect.

That's why Auburn sales have been consistently breaking records month after month this year. Why Auburn dealers sold more cars the first three months of this year than for the entire year of 1930. Why Auburn built and shipped 4054 cars in February, 5649 in March and 6003 in April, the greatest month in all Auburn's history. 5111 more cars have been built and sold already this year than for all of last year.

And the public demand is increasing. Our factories are working overtime.

The public wants the most for its money and knows that Auburn gives it. More than 600 new dealers have not been "left behind"; they have joined Auburn's ranks since January. And more are joining every day.

We are rapidly increasing production facilities. That's more Good News!

And, most important of all, owners of new Auburn cars are universally enthusiastic. Their praise sends crowds to Auburn stores. We invite you to get in touch with us.

PROSECUTIONS IN CITY'S TRICK BIDS EXPECTED

Criminal Action Likely To Involve 'Payroll;' Kerr Audit Nearly Ready.

Developments in the dual audit of the City Department of Supplies, nearly completed, has brought to light these facts:

1—Prosecutions are likely to be started against some of those accused of using trick specifications in the sale of supplies to the city, along with others, including a few on city and county payrolls.

2—The Citizens' Committee report is to be withheld for two weeks, following the presentation of the city's audit to Council by Controller James P. Kerr, probably this week.

3—The controller's audit is to show status of all purchases made by the city, rather than entering into any question of possible fraud. The Citizens' Committee report will present questions requiring the attention of District Attorney Andrew T. Park and that of his assistant, W. H. Colvin, in charge of the investigation.

The finishing touches are being made to the Price, Waterhouse & Co. report. The audit made by Main & Co. for the Citizens' Committee is also nearly finished, but will require checking.

COLVIN DELAYS ACTION

Assistant District Attorney Colvin has assured the Citizens' Committee that he will not act on the city's report of the audit until he has the report of the Citizens' Committee. The Citizens' Committee wishes to check financial and other transactions.

During the last week much information has been obtained by auditors regarding the purchase of various items for the city's fire department. Just what these have disclosed has not been indicated.

ENGINEERS ASK DATA

Request for technical data in the investigation of the Department of Public Works was received yesterday by City Engineer Charles M. Reppert from the engineers' committee, of which Samuel A. Taylor is the chairman.

The request was for information concerning engineering questins and also contracts. The information was asked as a result of a meeting held the previous day by the engineers.

UTILITIES ISSUE IN '32, NYE SAYS

NEW YORK, May 16.—(AP.)—Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, said today the Republican party must adopt a liberal policy, particularly toward public utilities, if it hopes to carry the Middle West in 1932.

Senator Nye, a Progressive Republican, declared he looked for public utilities to be the big issue in 1932.

He said Gov. Roosevelt would be " a very strong candidate indeed" in North Dakota and surrounding states—stronger than former Gov. Smith or Owen D. Young Nye asserted:

"Public utilities is the most important issue today, and I look for it to be the big issue in 1932. Electricity—light and power—and other utilities, like other monopolies, will have a stranglehold on us which it will take many years to loosen unless we take steps for their proper regulation.

"We in North Dakota are watching with great interest the St. Lawrence River project, because the St. Lawrence is our road to the sea."

Prohibition, he said, will be no issue in North Dakota, "unless the wets make it so."

Slain Man's Estate To Get U. S. Claim

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—Comptroller General McCarl was ordered by Justice Bailey in the District of Columbia Supreme Court today to pay in full the $30,000 award made by Congress to Mrs. Katherine Imbrie for the loss of her late husband, Robert W. Imbrie, killed by a mob while acting consul general at Teheran, Persia.

McCarl had declined to pay the full award, claiming the Imbrie estate owed the government $1,325.

MISS MARY H. WANAMAKER

COLLEGE GIRLS IN MAY FETE

Among Pittsburgh district girls who will have part in the May Festival to be held on the Lake Erie College campus, Painesville, O., next Saturday, are: Priscilla Van Voorhis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Van Voorhis, 407 South street, Charleroi; Mary H. Wanamaker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Wanamaker, Lexington avenue, Pittsburgh, who will be knights in armor in the pageant, and Mary Elizabeth Junkin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hays M. Junkin, 18 Grant avenue, Bellevue, who will be among the swimming and Indian dancers. Miss Jane Beatty, 232 Hiland avenue, Ben Avon, is to be one of the golf and riding dancers.

The festival will be staged in place of the annual field day, which carried exclusively track events, and is a far more ambitious program than the traditional spring track meet, with many more students taking part. Scores of visitors are expected from Ohio and nearby states to view the elaborate array of knights in armor, pages, May Queen and attendants, heralds, Colonial ladies and gentlemen, Danish and Swedish peasants, and the modern tennis, golf, riding, swimming and airplane dancers.

Civil War Again Threatens in China

CANTON, China, May 16.—(AP.)—Civil war was threatened here today. Anti-Nationalist government leaders were reported planning to set up an independent provisional military regime for Kwangtung and Kwangsi provinces with headquarters in Canton.

Military hostilities, it was believed, would follow closely upon any attempt to establish a southern government opposed to the central government at Nanking, headed by Chiang Kai-Shek, whom rebellious elements here have sought to oust.

Woodward Leaves $10,000 to Widow

The will of James F. Woodward, of McKeesport, state secretary of the interior, was filed for probate yesterday in the Register of Wills office. The estate, valued at $10,000, has been left to his wife, Isabella A. Woodward, until her death, at which time it will revert to their daughter, Mrs. Helen Stone.

IRISH PILGRIMS FLOCK TO ISLE

DONEGAL, Irish Free State, May 16.—(AP.)—Pilgrims from many parts of Ireland were flocking today to the Holy Island on Lake Derg, County of Donegal, which tradition says is the most sacred spot owned by the Celtic peoples.

Cardinal Macrory tomorrow will consecrate the Basilica Church, reckoned as the most modern church in the country. Archbishop Robinson the first papal nuncio to visit the island since Msgr. Chiericatti was ferried there in a hollow beech tree in 1515, will participate in the ceremony.

Unlike most Donegal lakes, Lake Derg contains no salmon because, tradition says, St. Patrick cursed them when he mistook the back of a slippery fish for a stepping stone. The rocks on the island are worn smooth by the feet of pilgrims of bygone years.

P. & L. E. Chief Clerk Is Given Promotion

Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad officials have announced the appointment of Thomas F. Sheridan as assistant to the superintendent of motive power and rolling stock, with headquarters at McKees Rocks. Sheridan has for several years held the position of chief clerk to the superintendent of motive power.

CITY OPENS BIDS FOR LUMBER ON REPAVING JOBS

O'Herron Company Expected To Get Contract Covering Nobelstown Road Work.

Bids ranging from $100 to $4,000 were opened today by Director Edward G. Lang, of the Department of Public Works, for furnishing lumber to be used for forms and temporary work in connection with the repaving of the Noblestown road, in co-operation with the State Highway Department. City engineers had estimated the lumber item at $2,500.

The M. O'Herron Company, city contractors, whose bid for the entire project was low, will probably be awarded the contract. The same company was also the low bidder for the repaving of Wilkins avenue, estimated by city engineers at $61,767. The company's bid was $45,350.

NEW BIDDING

This was the first time that city contractors bidding for a street improvement project submitted lump bids for lumber to be used on the job for street car platforms and crossings.

The new system was drafted in the office of Charles M. Reppert, city engineer, as a result of the recent hearing of charges against the Public Works Department in City Council. Prior to the hearing contractors submitted lumber bids on a new and reused basis.

OFFERS SCANNED

The O'Herron Company bid for lumber on the Noblestown road improvement was $500. Other bids were: McDonough & O'Toole, $4,000; Edward T. Brodemarkle, $3,250; Frank Tillman, $2,000; McRady Construction Company, $700; A. F. Jordano, $600; F. W. Scott, $600; Harrison Construction Company, $500, and the Parkview Construction Company, $100.

McDonough & O'Toole submitted a bid of $1,500 for lumber on the Wilkins avenue improvement, and the M. O'Herron Company, $100. The city engineer's estimate was $500. There were 13 bidders on the Wilkins avenue repaving project.

BAN DRINKING OF SEIZED RUM

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—A warning to dry agents against misappropriating seized liquor to their own use was contained today in the weekly bulletin of the Prohibition Bureau. The bulletin said:

"Liquor held under seizure is contraband and no more of it than is required for evidence in court may be removed from the original containers.

"Recently as a result of disclosures made by the special inspection division it was found that certain agents not only had misappropriated seized beer to their own use, but also had permitted others to do likewise and to drink the contraband. As a consequence three agents have been separated from the service.

"Such distinct violations of trust will not be tolerated."

GUEST DENIES GIRL WAS DRUNK AT 'GIN PARTY'

Woman Tells of Seeing Body Of Arlene in Car Later; Co-Defendants to Testify.

VALPARAISO, Ind., May 16.—(AP.)—Paul Barton and Henry Shirk, jointly indicted with Virgil Kirkland for the murder of Arlene Draves, were brought from Crown Point jail today to testify early next week in the second trial of Kirkland for the slaying of the girl. It is expected they will reveal inside facts of the liquor revel at which the Gary girl met death.

Mrs. Bernice Elser, a guest at the fatal party, took the stand today to describe events at the David Thompson home. There was dancing and drinking, but she declared that Miss Draves was not drunk a few minutes before midnight, nor did she appear ill.

Later, Mrs. Elser said she and Mrs. Tony Shirk, another guest, saw a nude body in the rear of Paul Barton's car. The witness said she knew it was Miss Draves "because she was the only one missing."

Previously, Mrs. Elser testified, she had heard the men in the party joking about "the one in the car."

Miss Elsie Draves, school teacher sister of the victim, testified that when Arlene left her home with the defendant to go to the party at the Thompson home, she was in good health.

The next time the sister saw her, she said, was in the morgue, her clothing torn and dishelveled, her body battered and bruised.

POPE RECEIVES U.S. DELEGATES TO LABOR RITES

40th Anniversary of Leo XIII Encyclical Celebrated; Pontiff's Speech Praised.

VATICAN CITY, May 16.—(AP.)—Continuing the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of Pope Leo XIII's encyclical Rerum Novarum on labor, Pope Pius today received in private audience Bishop Edwin V. O'Hara, of Great Falls, Mont., and other American delegates, thanking them for coming so far to participate in the celebration.

Hundreds of messages expressing gratitude for yesterday's papal broadcast already have arrived from the United States and other parts of the world, all congratulating the pontiff on his forthcoming labor encyclical, a resume of which was made public yesterday.

Bishop O'Harra added his congratulations and discussed with the pontiff some of his own problems, particularly religious work in rural districts, as vice president of the Social Action Section of the National Catholic Welfare Council at Washington.

He did not make a comprehensive report as this is not the regular quinquennial visit required of bishops. The pontiff imparted his apostolic blessing, extending it to the Great Falls diocese.

The Pope's forthcoming encyclical, entitled Quadragesimo Anno, probably will be issued on or about May 25.

MACE TO QUIT; PLAN TRIBUTE

Hale is chairman of the committee and will be assisted by Aaron Westlake and Harry M. Brown.

Mace will close 36 years of service on June 12, 20 of which have been spent in the Pittsburgh district in Y. M. C. A. work. During that time he has spoken in churches throughout Western Pennsylvania and has for the past six years conducted the International Sunday School Lessons over KDKA.

CURTIUS TILTS WITH BRIAND ON CUSTOMS PACT

German Rebukes French Minister for Raising of Issue League Is to Settle.

GENEVA, May 16.—(AP.)—Julius Curtius, German foreign minister, and Aristide Briand clashed today over the proposed Austro-German customs accord as the commission on European federation resumed its sessions.

The German minister, in a general discussion of the economic situation in Europe, praised a bilateral and regional customs agreements as the best remedy for the prevailing economic distress. Briand declared that such a union as Germany and Austria propose means "trouble for the peoples" and should be avoided.

BRIAND'S VIEW

The customs issue is not the whole of the economic problem, said Briand, and it is a result, not a cause, of the present economic distress. He said:

"Let us not abandon our efforts for a general tariff agreement. Perhaps our efforts thus far have been too ambitious, too wide in scope. The French government's new proposals on this subject will be presented for full discussion in due course. At any rate we must not attempt what it is forbidden to attempt."

Briand concluded with the assertion that he could not agree to the Austro-German proposal.

REBUKES FRENCHMAN

Herr Curtius retorted that he had not mentioned the Austro-German proposal specifically, and that it was his understanding that subject was reserved for discussion before the League of Nations Council on Monday. He declared:

"M. Briand has declared this plan for a customs union forbidden. It is not the business of this commission to decide that. That is a point for the League Council to consider."

The dispute was ended by an adjournment until later in the afternoon and it was not thought likely that it would be resumed before this commission.

Curtius and Briand were the only speakers today.

Rubins, sculptor, Minneapolis, Minn.; John M. Sitton, painter, Greenville, S. C.; Salvatore de Maio, painter, New Haven, Conn., and William Simpson, sculptor, Baltimore, Md., were presented to King Victor Emanuel and the Queen.

The New Lincoln

IN A DISTINGUISHED DISPLAY

MAY 18th TO MAY 21st, INCLUSIVE . . . 10 A. M. TO 10 P. M.

IN THE HOTEL SCHENLEY, BOULEVARD AND FIFTH AVE.

AUSPICES OF THE LINFORD MOTOR CO., 5124 LIBERTY AVE.

FOR the first time in this city the new Lincoln will be displayed in the Metropolitan Salon setting. The distinguished body types which compose this Salon are representative of the wide variety of coachwork available with the new Lincoln chassis. The discriminating motorist will find here great latitude for the expression of his personal choice.

Longer, lower, with smoothly flowing contours and slanting windshield, this new Lincoln creates a new conception of motor car beauty—from the pointed radiator to the smartly tailored stern.

The new Lincoln chassis provides greater body room with its 145-inch wheelbase. Wheels are smaller and center of gravity has been lowered. These new dimensions have permitted a complete redesigning—through its own foremost talent and that of such outstanding coachmakers as Brunn, LeBaron, Dietrich, Willoughby, Judkins, Locke and Derham. The result is a distinct achievement in fine car building, with long, sweeping lines, expressing a new beauty, a new harmony of grace and strength.

Beneath these fleet bodies is a newly designed motor and chassis. The new engine is 33% more powerful—developing 120 horse-power. It is quieter and more completely responsive. A smooth gliding ease is given to driving by the new Lincoln free-wheeling transmission.

Longer springs and a new braking system are among other features that add to the safety and pleasure of Lincoln motoring.

In connection with the display of custom coachwork, there has also been arranged a mechanical exhibit consisting of the new 145-inch wheelbase chassis, features of the new engine, and the famous Johansson gages which control the precision methods of Lincoln manufacture.

THREE SEIZED IN GUN BATTLE

STEUBENVILLE, O., May 16.—Chester Whirlow, 23, captured after a gun battle with police at East Steubenville, W. Va., early today, confessed, police say, to his part in the kidnaping of Gus Kayafis, Steubenville grocer, March 6 last, and robbery of his safe of $2,000.

Whirlow, according to Chief Ross Cunningham, implicated Edward Martin, 23, now under arrest and three other men still at large. Police with riot guns fired 50 shots at Whirlow and his companions in effecting today's capture. Acting on a tip, a squad of police led by Capt. William McCarthy, crossed the river with machine guns, surrounded a camp and called on Whirlow and his companions to surrender. Revolver shots was the answer. Police then opened up with their riot guns and Whirlow surrendered.

George Wilson, 24, and Thomas Thomas, 25, also surrendered and denied they did any shooting, blaming Richard Thomas, 26, who escaped.

Wilson and Thomas are held as suspicious characters.

Smith, however, has been mentioned as a possible successor to Kambach.

SUSPECT DENIES SLAYING TWO

KANSAS CITY, May 16.—(AP.)—A manhunt that began when the bodies of two school teaching sisters were found near Tonkawa, Okla., December 28, was ended today, with Earl Quinn, 30, ex-convict, protesting innocence from a jail cell here.

Quinn, charged with murder in the shooting of Zexia Griffith, 34, and Jessie Griffith, 24, was arrested in Omaha, Neb., yesterday.

Kansas City detectives trapped the suspect at the Omaha Union Station as he sought to meet his wife, who had been under surveillance. While announcing he would fight extradition, they quoted him as expressing relief at his arrest, saying:

"I'm glad the chase is over. It's a bum rap and I can beat it."

Extradition papers for Quinn, who once served a term in the Missouri Penitentiary, were sought in Oklahoma City.

SAIL TO HUNT SUNKEN RICHES

SUNDERLAND, England, May 16.—(AP.)—The 296-ton steamship Reclaimer sailed at dawn today on a mission known only to her owners, but generally believed to be a treasure hunt.

The customary hail from harbor guards of "where ahoy?" brought only the reply, "to sea." She sailed under sealed orders deliverable to the captain after reaching the North Sea, bearing a picked crew, provisions for five months and four expert divers with modern apparatus.

The stowing away of deep sea gear led inhabitants of this Northeastern English town to reason that the Reclaimer was bound on a quest for vessels sunk during the war. It was first suggested she was seeking an Egyptian treasure ship off the coast of France, but this met neither with confirmation nor denial from her owners.

General opinion was that the Reclaimer planned to seek the liner Tubantia, sunk in the North Sea, presumably by a German submarine unaware that she was carrying $5,000,000 to Buenos Aires to bolster Germany's credit in South America. Rumor said the bullion was packed in Dutch cheeses.

Frost on May 28, Forecast by Seer

URBANA, O., May 16.—(AP.)—C. C. Inskeep, of Urbana, is such an accurate weather forecaster that vegetable growers of the region keep in close touch with him. He predicted the recent frosts. He now says there will be a frost on May 28. He claims there is a frost in May for every fog in February, the frosts corresponding closely with the dates of February fogs.

KLINE TALKS OF HIS ILLNESS

in—even if there isn't much chance of one doing so.

"I'll have to have a plastic surgeon fix that up in a year or so."

STILL VERY WEAK

He still is extremely weak. A walk of more than a block leaves him tired and exhausted. He negotiates the stairs to his rooms on the second floor of the hotel with difficulty. He has been taking short walks and auto rides daily to regain his strength.

From the time he went to Cambridge Springs, where he spent three weeks fighting the carbuncles before submitting to hospital treatment, until he was discharged after his operations, Mayor Kline lost 20 pounds, he said. Since then, however, he has been gaining steadily.

His appearance is excellent. The mayor is certain that all he needs to get himself physically fit is a thorough rest. He went on:

"My doctors made a thorough examination of me in the hospital. They told me I was organically as sound as a man can be and they haven't tried doping me with a lot of medicine."

STAYS NEAR DOCTORS

"They want me to rest and follow a slightly restricted diet. For a man 60 years old, they tell me, I'm in fine shape, and with a little care can continue that way for years.

"That's one of the reasons I'm not making any plans to leave Pittsburgh immediately. While the sea air might have a recuperative effect, I'd rather stay near the doctors who are familiar with my case for the time being."

APPETITE IMPROVES

Kline's appetite at least is improving. Responding to the tangy lake air, he breakfasted with Mrs. Kline in the hotel dining room this morning, and had little trouble disposing of a fair sized order of eggs, sausage, toast and coffee.

He and his wife expect to return to their home in Park Mansions, Pittsburgh, on Sunday.

Stone Age Remains Found on Island

ANTANANARIVO, Madagascar, May 16.—(AP.)—A woman scientist, Mlle. Basse, has established that men lived on this island in the Stone Age, thus upsetting a general scientific opinion.

She found in the southwestern region a number of stone implements and weapons which escaped previous searchers.

Her discovery is regarded among savants as opening a new chapter in the scientific knowledge of Madagascar.

STATE BEGINS WORK ON NORTH HIGHWAY LINK

Road to Give Pittsburgh Direct Outlet to Buffalo; Open to Traffic Sept. 1.

HARRISBURG, May 16. (INS.)—The last link in a new, short route between Pittsburgh and Bradford is under construction in Clarion County, between Kittanning and Brookville, and should be available for traffic by September 1, this year, Secretary of Highways S. S. Lewis announced today.

The project is 6.72 miles long, extending from Thorne Borough through Redbank Township, on Route 28.

Completion of the link, Lewis said, will make available the nearest approach to an air-line route between Pittsburgh and the North-central section yet conceived. The completed route will link Pittsburgh, Kittanning, Brookville, Brockway, Ridgway, Kane and Bradford, in a direct communicating traffic artery leading to Buffalo and other northern points, also connecting with the Roosevelt Highway.

Construction of the new link will be a bituminous surface treated macadam surface on broken stone base. The contract was awarded to [illegible] Construction Company of [illegible] Pa., at [illegible] 6.88.

Under the [illegible] work must be completed before September 1.

BARBER HUNTED IN HUGE FRAUD

CHICAGO, May 16.—(INS.)—John Factor, known better as "Jake the Barber," was the target of a wide search today. Government agents and police seeking to solve an English swindle said to involve about $5,000,000 raided an apartment here yesterday and were told by Mrs. Factor that Mr. Factor had gone to Los Angeles.

Just how Factor obtained the money he is charged with procuring from Broad Street Press, Ltd., of London, was not divulged by Godfrey Haggard, consul general, or government officers, who have the warrants. It was indicated the method used was a fake issue of mining stock, sold from a fake office and boosted by a fake financial publication.

Arthur Kline, alleged member of the swindle group, was reported held in New York, and another, a Harry Green, was being sought.

Tales about the former barber are numerous, one of which is that the Prince of Wales was once one of his victims.

THEATER MAN'S WIDOW HOPES FOR ACQUITTAL

Mrs. Nixon-Nirdlinger's Defense in Slaying Will Claim Cruelty by Husband.

NICE, France, May 16.—(INS.)—French and American attorneys, who will conduct the defense of Mrs. Charlotte Nixon-Nirdlinger, former beauty prize winner and showgirl, when she faces a charge of "murder with provocation" on Wednesday, expect an early acquittal, it was learned today.

Mrs. Nixon-Nirdlinger has admitted shooting and killing her husband, Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, Philadelphia and Atlantic City theatrical producer, on March 12, but the defense will contend that the deed was committed in self-defense.

CLAIMS CRUELTY

Maitre Jose Bonifacio, of Corsica, who will head the battery of defense attorneys, said that it had been definitely established that Nixon-Nirdlinger attacked his wife and that she fired four shots, two of which took effect. The attorney cited the fact that there were no state witnesses to disprove the St. Louis woman's claim that she fired in self-defense. He said:

"Our case rests on three points. Mrs. Nixon-Nirdlinger was a good wife and mother, with no stain on her character. Her husband was subject to fits of violence, following an automobile accident in the United States, and lately he had been known to attack his wife. We shall call witnesses to prove each of these statements."

AMERICAN AIDS

Morgan Farrell, well-known American lawyer, who practices in Paris, and Maitre Louis Gassin, one of the most famous trial lawyers in Southern France, will assist Maitre Bonifacio. The case will be heard before Judge Gasta, of the Court of Appeals at Aix-en-Provence.

ANNOUNCE BIG PROGRAM FOR REALTY MEET

Baltimore Convention to Open May 27, Gov. Richie Will Welcome Realtors.

The tentative program for the annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards to be held in Baltimore May 27 to 30 has been announced by Herbert U. Nelson, executive secretary of the association.

The greater part of the convention will be devoted to round table discussions, open forums and addresses given by men highly specialized in the various departments of real estate. An attempt is being made to cover every possible feature of interest to realtors.

PLAN WELCOME

Governor Richie of Maryland will open the convention Wednesday morning, May 27, with an address of welcome. Harry S. Kissel, president of the national association, will respond.

The election of officers will be held Friday morning, May 29, according to present arrangements. A business meeting will follow the election.

Peyton E. Strobel, president of the Real Estate Board of Baltimore, speaking before a recent luncheon meeting of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board, said that arrangements are being made by the Baltimore board for a series of sightseeing tours about Baltimore, Annapolis and Washington. Dancing and bridge parties have also been scheduled, Strobel announced.

SCHEDULE TOURS

The Pittsburgh Real Estate Board will be host to a group of western realtors who will stop off here en route to the convention city, May 26. Representatives of the Pittsburgh board and their guests will leave for Baltimore Tuesday evening, May 26, according to tentative arrangements.

MANY HOMES FIND BUYERS IN PAST WEEK

Weather Has Little Effect On Sub-Division Sales; Wellington Plan Active.

Despite bad weather the residential real estate market proved active the past week as shown by realtors' reports.

Although moderate priced homes figured in most of the sales, several large homes also found buyers.

In the Wellington Heights Plan, Perry highway, an Old English design home at Montclair avenue and Wellington drive was purchased for $27,000 from H. C. Holmes. The house has six rooms, two baths, play room, den and a two-car garage.

SELL TWO LOTS

In the same plan the Wellington Heights Land Company has sold to Fred Gehlb a lot measuring 50x130 feet on Marquette road. Another lot 50x150 feet on Marquette road has been secured by Charles Muehlbronner from the same company.

A nine-room English design home, 6902 Yorkshire drive, Fourteenth Ward, has been sold by L. H. Fellabom & Son, builders, to William H. and Irene F. Latimer, according to Arthur B. Kline & Co., realtors who closed the sale. The house has three baths and a two-car garage.

BUY SMALL HOMES

The Finance Realty Company have announced the sale of several moderate priced homes. A brick house of six rooms at 1600 Broadhead street, has been sold by the company for John C. Phillips to A. Sciullo. The consideration, according to the realtors, was $6,000.

Four houses of six rooms each, Wheeler and Conemaugh streets, Thirteenth Ward, have been sold by John Santoro to M. F. Berardino for $16,000.

BODE ACTIVE IN SOUTH HILLS

No slump in home buying and building is in evidence in Craig Manor, Mt. Lebanon, according to W. A. Bode & Co., developers of the plan.

Recent installation of improvements, including paving, sewerage, water, light and gas has served to stimulate sales of building lots in the district. The present low cost of building materials has also proved an inducement to builders, Bode reports.

Several sales have recently been reported in the Raleigh Square Plan, a Carrick development of W. A. Bode & Co. Water, gas and light have already been installed. Two lots in Raleigh Square have been sold to John Hack, who is erecting houses on each. Charles Grant and George Kearn are also recent purchasers of lots. Both will build homes, according to Bode.

MEDICAL ARTS BUILDING OPEN

Pittsburgh's newest office building, the $1,000,000 Medical Arts Building, Fifth avenue and Atwood street, has been completed and is now open to the public.

The completion of the structure adds another unit to the city's medical center in Oakland. Among the other new buildings in the medical center are the Eye and Ear Hospital, Children's Hospital, Magee Hospital, Montefiore Hospital, Presbyterian Hospital and the Falk Clinic.

The Medical Arts Building is modernistic in design with all floors except the first devoted to physicians' offices. The lobby is constructed of Grand I... marble in a black and lave... r color combination. The dark tones are relieved with aluminum decorations on elevator doors, entrance grill, modernistic pilasters and medallion inserts.

A feature of the building is the 400-car ramp garage occupying 10 levels on the Atwood side of the building and giving immediate parking facilities for tenants and visitors.

Construction was started October 27, 1930.

English Design Home Purchased In Shady Avenue

A modern English design home of six rooms, Shady avenue and Caton street, Fourteenth Ward, has been sold by the Potter Title and Trust Company to Harry and Laura Young for $11,500, according to White & Company, downtown realtors.

The lot measures 54x96 feet. The purchasers report the realtors will occupy the property.

ISSUE REPORT OF MORTGAGES

A total of 352 mortgages with a valuation of $1,759,249.51 were placed on record from May 7 to and including May 13, according to the weekly report of The Title Guaranty Company.

Of this number 312, amounting to $1,603,499.73, were straight mortgages, the report shows. The remaining 40, valued at $155,749.78, were purchase money mortgages.

One hundred and twenty of the straight mortgages were to corporations, 111 to building and loan associations and 81 to individuals. The corporation mortgages were valued at $864,480, the building and loan mortgages at $392,805 and those which went to individuals at $346,214.73.

MONTEVERDE ON COMMITTEE

L. W. Monteverde, vice president of the Real Estate Company of Pittsburgh and a former president of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board, has been appointed a member of the Committee on City Planning and Zoning of President Hoover's Conference on Home Building and Ownership.

L. W. Monteverde

The committee on which Monteverde has been appointed will meet next month and submit to the federal government a plan to stimulate home building and buying. The committee will also attempt to find means to aid those in moderate circumstances to secure a home. As yet no definite date has been selected for the meeting.

Monteverde, recognized as an authority on city planning and zoning, is also chairman of the Planning and Zoning Committee of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and chairman of the Pittsburgh Planning Commission.

Amherst Terrace Lots Find Buyers

A lot fronting 37½ feet on Glass avenue, Amherst Terrace plan, Versailles Township, has been acquired by John Gietl from the Amherst Terrace Realty Company. Gietl has started the erection of a brick bungalow, according to William M. Weldon, McKeesport broker.

Two lots fronting 50 feet on McCully avenue, Amherst Terrace, have been sold to Hannah Hoberg, who is having plans prepared for a home.

Owners' Association To Hear McIntyre

Lewis W. McIntyre, city traffic engineer, will address members of the Building Owners and Managers Association, Wednesday at a luncheon meeting in McCreery's dining room. McIntyre will deal with the downtown parking problem and the question of complete elimination of parking on the streets of the triangle.

Better Homes Medal Awarded by Hoover

WASHINGTON, May 16.—President Hoover has presented the Better Homes Gold Medal to Reginald D. Johnson for his small house architectural design. Johnson, of Los Angeles, was given the award for his design of a cottage on the estate of William R. Dickinson, Hope Ranch Park, Santa Barbara. The medal is made available to the better homes in America by Mrs. William Brown Melloney, of New York.

Trade Two Houses In Exchange Deal

In a recent trade transaction R. S. Glick conveyed to August Reitmeyer an eight-room brick residence on lot 40x120 feet at 516 Bellaire avenue. In exchange Reitmeyer gave title to a seven-room frame house on lot 60x100 feet at 1829 Woodward avenue, Nineteenth Ward. The Auslander-Krasnow Company and Smith & Mott were the brokers.

Home Owners' Guide Shows Large Sales

Evidence that the American native love of a home is still a force to be reckoned with is shown in a report from the Bureau of Standards that the publication "How to Own Your Own Home," up to the time of a recent count, had a sale of 336,597 copies.

Realtors to Hear Johnston Tuesday

A new home at 2424 Wilson avenue, North Side, has been sold by Clement J. Miller to William H. Richardson, according to W. M. Dawson & Company, North Side realtors. The purchaser is occupying the house.

A vacant lot in Perrysville avenue has been sold by the same realtors for the Stephen Newburn estate to D. Williams for $2,000. Williams is planning construction of a six-room brick residence on the property.

A long term lease on the six-story fireproof warehouse at 1018-20 Forbes street has been closed by the Porter & McDowell Company, realtors, for the owner, William C. Smith, to the Fort Pitt Casket Company.

600 U. S. ARMY PLANES JOIN IN AIR FIRST TIME

All Forces Take Wing for Practice Over Ohio; Big Sky Parade Slated Today.

FAIRFIELD DEPOT, Dayton, O., May 16.—(AP.)—All Army flying forces took the air today under one command for the first time in history.

Squadron by squadron they wheeled up from neighboring Wright Field and Fairfield Air Depot on orders of Brig. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, assistant chief of Army Air Corps, until 600 ships were on the wing. Once in the air they separated into five groups and headed in as many directions from Dayton to practice formation flying and group maneuvers, to which residents of Chicago, New York, Boston, Washington and other cities will thrill within next two weeks.

BIG SHOW FOR WEST

Meanwhile citizenry of Eastern Indiana and Western Ohio get all the benefit of the nation's big free show. From Richmond, Ind., to Kenton, O., on the north, to Columbus and Portsmouth, O., on the east, Cincinnati on the south and Greensburg, Ind., and Richmond, Ind., to the west, was the work-and-play ground today of the dozens of squadrons, assembled from every corner of the country, as they learned to fly in unison.

The most spectacular show, however, will be an aerial parade tomorrow of every military ship here for the maneuvers.

At 7:14 a. m. the slowest fliers, 70 bombers from Langley, March and Kelly fields, will take off for rendezvous points to the southwest. They will be followed by the third attack group, 50 fast planes designed to carry two men and do heavy fighting. The speedier types, 200 pursuit planes from Michigan and California fields, will take off last, and then lead a parade over Fairfield Depot at 9 a. m.

COVER MANY MILES

The parade will form over many square miles of territory to the south and west of Dayton.

Each squadron knows to the minute when it is due to fall in line. Pursuit, attack and bombardment planes will sweep past Gen. Foulois and his staff in that order and, presumably, without a break in their alignment.

Night Flight Over N.Y. Cut to Save Fliers, Hurley Says

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—Secretary Hurley said today air demonstrations over New York City scheduled for the night of May 22 had been canceled for military reasons and not because of protests against the mock bombardment.

The War Secretary added his explanation to that previously made by Assistant Secretary Davison and Gen. MacArthur, chief of staff, saying the night flight in which 672 planes were to participate had been called off because it was felt it would be too hard on the fliers.

Protests against the air maneuvers next week have been received from Baltimore, New York and Boston. Secretary Hurley said the maneuvers over Boston would be carried out despite the objections of some persons in that area and that the only change had been cancellation of the night flight.

Communist and pacifists have objected to the maneuvers and others have protested because of their possible effect upon hospital patients or the work of courts.

Five Texas Convicts Escape From Jail

SAN ANGELO, Tex., May 16.—(AP.)—Five of the most desperate prisoners in the Tom Green County jail escaped today after overpowering a trusty and taking four guns from the jailer and a deputy sheriff.

They drove away in an automobile commandeered from a postman and were last seen headed toward the Mexican border. The escaped persons are J. D. Conner, William Quinn, Alba Pitts, R. E. (Blackie) Martin and Clinton Powell.

LEGIONS PLAN FLYING CIRCUS

The arrival over Pittsburgh of 105 airplanes on Thursday will be the signal for the opening of a three-day aeronautical circus at Bettis Field under the auspices of the 42 posts of the American Legion in Allegheny County.

Commanded by Brig. Gen. B. D. Foulois, 54 headquarters planes, mostly of the observation type, and 51 attack planes will fly over Pittsburgh in battle formation en route to the East for a continuation of war maneuvers started yesterday at Dayton.

They will stop at Bettis Field and at Butler for refueling, according to a telegram to the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce from United States Senator David A. Reed. The airmen will be met by a delegation of chamber officials at the two airports.

The legion program will be climaxed on Friday and Saturday by stunt flying, parachute jumping and other aerial exhibitions.

Four Ohio Women Fugitives Captured

COLUMBUS, O., May 16.—(AP.)—All four of the women who escaped from the Marysville Reformatory were recaptured today. Two were taken in Columbus and the others were found hiding in a woods between Marysville and Bellefontaine later in the day.

Reformatory guards and Union County deputy sheriffs, working on a tip given them by the two women captured in Columbus, found Jessie Parsons, 22, Crooksville, and Anna Bogden, 22, Lakewood, in the woods and returned them to the institution.

Mrs. Mabel Flesch and Mrs. Zelma Long Theodore were taken early today at the home of a relative here.

Applause greeted the announcement of the verdict last night. Swindler was slain last March 30. DENY PRINCESS' ALIEN STATUS

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 16.—On the question of whether the Princess of Thurn and Taxis is a Hungarian citizen will determine whether the three-quarters of a million dollar alimony fund left the princess by Lord Fitzgerald, her first husband, shall be administered by the Fayette County or the Federal Court.

By virtue of her marriage to Victor, Prince of Thurn and Taxis, who has since died, the Uniontown woman claims she is a citizen of Hungary, and therefore, any estate in which she is interested should be handled by the Federal Court. The princess' charge that the fund is depreciating, and being mismanaged, is denied by the trustees, A. A. Thompson, son of J. V. Thompson; Robert J. Arnett and W. W. Parshall.

John Purcell Fitzgerald, who joins his mother in an effort to have the fund taken out of the hands of the Fayette court, resides in New York.

When Lord Fitzgerald was in Uniontown in 1928 he assigned certain rights and interests he had in the fund to the Second National Bank of Uniontown, and it is impossible for the estate to be administered unless the bank is a party thereto.

TIPSTAFF PAY BILL OPPOSED

County Commissioner C. C. McGovern told a delegation of tipstaffs yesterday that he was opposed to a bill awaiting Gov. Pinchot's signature, that empowers the judges of Allegheny County to increase tipstaffs' salaries. The present salary is $2,200 a year.

The delegation, soliciting McGovern's support, declared the measure was favored by the judges.

McGovern explained that the bill would permit the judges to fix present salaries at not less than $2,600 a year and allow them to grant increases any time in the future.

SPAIN'S FOREIGN LEGION REBELS

MADRID, May 16.—(Universal.)—Fresh trouble was reported for the young Spanish republic today when troops of the Spanish Foreign Legion at Ceuta, Spanish Morocco, staged a short-lived mutiny, according to advices reaching the capital.

The movement was quelled by loyal troops, the advices added. Ceuta is on the African coast, directly opposite Gibraltar.

The provinces are still restless after three days of anti-religious rioting. Reports stated that an engineer and his wife, motoring through the town, were slain by a mob which mistook them for Communists. The advices added that four members of the mob were killed when the motorist drove his machine into them.

President Niceto Alcala Zamora has as yet given no indication as to his reply to the Vatican protest against the burning of church property. An apology and an offer of reparations, or the severance of relations with the Vatican, are possibilities.

NOW TAKE OFF FAT A POUND A DAY ON A FULL STOMACH

Do Just These Two Simple Things

Fat Melts Away

NO tiring exercise, no starvation. Instead, a full stomach and never a hungry moment! Yet fat melts away. You can easily lose from four to seven pounds weekly, see the coarse lines of fat replaced by the refined lines of slenderness—and feel better than you ever felt before in your life.

WHAT YOU DO

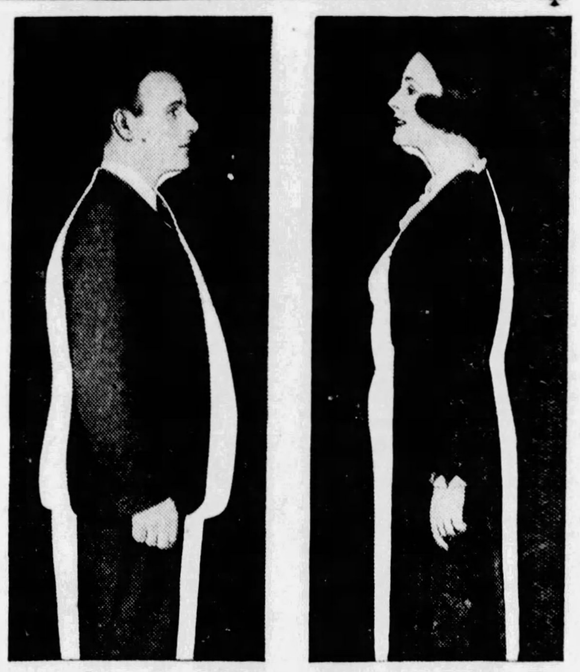
There are just two simple things you do: Clear your system—and keep it clear of waste matter, toxins and depleting poisons with ordinary JAD SALTS obtainable at any drug store. Start with a teaspoonful in a full glass of water tomorrow morning—a sparkling and pleasant drink.

Then EAT YOUR FILL — as much as your appetite can stand —of meals consisting of the following foods:

At breakfast eat two oranges, or the juice of two oranges. Eat also two slices of toasted whole wheat or bran bread. Eat rolled oats (with milk, not cream).

At luncheon eat a good size piece of lean meat, then see how much spinach, lettuce, sauerkraut, boiled cabbage, green peas, broccoli or fresh turnips you can eat. EAT ALL YOU CAN COMFORTABLY HOLD of these foods. For dessert eat any fresh fruit; cantaloupe, berries, apples, sliced oranges, pears. Substitute turnips for potatoes. Substitute lean meats—beef, chicken, veal, white fish, trout, bass, etc.—for pork or any fat meats.

At night, have another FILL-UP-FULL meal as above. Cut down on butter and sweets—eat half of what you eat now. That's easy. For with your stomach full of other foods, you'll never notice it. Drink water or not as you like.



The Figure Every Fat Person Would Love to Have

4 TO 7 POUNDS GONE IN WEEK

At the end of a week, you'll see the scale down four to seven pounds—according to how much overweight you are—from what you weighed the day you started. Your health, too, will be better. You'll be more active, more vigorous than perhaps for years. Your friends will soon begin to notice your increasing slenderness. You'll soon avoid the embarrassment of being called fat or bulky. And—you'll do it with NEVER A HUNGRY MOMENT!

If in doubt about this safe and simple way, ASK ANY DOCTOR. Show him this article. Ask him whether or not it is safe and sure. It marks the latest findings of scientific men in the field of weight reduction. For it performs two necessary and important functions.

The JAD SALTS clear the bowels and system of the excessive toxins most overweight people have. *The change in diet—the FILLING OF THE STOMACH TO ITS LIMIT—with foods that turn to energy instead of fat, decreases the weight day by day. The salts build up your health. The change in food eases off the fat.

Start today. Clip this dietary out and save it. Get big package of ordinary JAD SALTS for the cleansing part of the method at any drug store. A large bottle costs less than a dollar.

*Note particularly—the salts are urged purely as a poison banishing agent—not as a reducing. The change in food does the work.

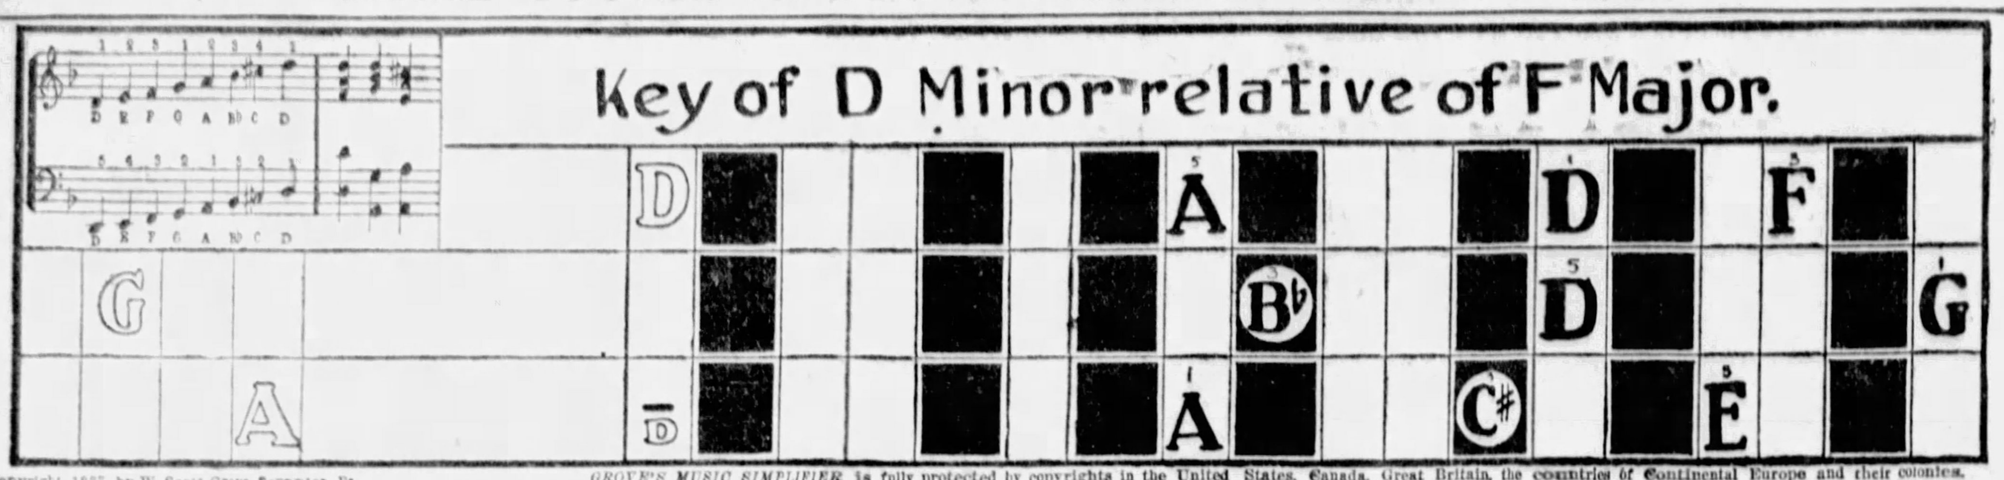
Accuse Woman of Murder To Save Fee as Witness

NEW BLOOMFIELD, Pa., May 16.—(AP.)—A woman was under a formal charge of murder here today because a taxpayer objected to having her receive $5 a day as a material witness.

The woman, Mrs. Lola Mell, was served with a murder warrant yesterday just before she was taken to Harrisburg to attend a coroner's inquest which blamed James Ritter for the death of Mrs. Eleanor May Wright, 46. Mrs. Mell was housekeeper for Ritter. She testified at the inquest that Ritter had struck Mrs. Wright with a stove poker. Since his arrest, she has been held as a material witness.

State police and Perry County authorities expressed surprise when James C. Wright, husband of the dead woman, swore out a murder warrant against Mrs. Mell. Wright today revealed that he brought the charge at the request of John Motter, a local lawyer. Motter explained that he was acting only as a taxpayer. While Mrs. Mell was being held as a material witness, he said, the county was forced to pay her $5 a day. As soon as the warrant was served, her pay ceased, he said.

HOME COURSE IN PIANO PLAYING—LESSON NO. 16



Copyright, 1927, by W. Scott Grove, Scranton, Pa. GROVE'S MUSIC SIMPLIFIER is fully protected by copyrights in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, the countries of Continental Europe and their colonies.

This lesson, according to Grove's simple series of home instruction for the piano or organ, presents the next step in the mastery of the fundamental principles of music. If you have become proficient in the previous lessons you will find this one easy.

INSTRUCTION—Place chart upon the keyboard of piano or organ so that the little underlined D at the bottom of each chart corresponds into position to D of the keyboard.

Each chord is composed of a triad with a note in the bass, and the notes of each triad are numbered 1, 3, 5. Note that in every chart the upper chord is "built" on the keynote, or tonic, and is called the tonic chord; the second is the subdominant, "built" on the subdominant or fourth tone of the scale; the third or dominant chord is "built" on the dominant tone, the fifth of the scale. Note that the note on which each chord is "built" is repeated in the bass. Remembering this, you may experiment by rearranging the triads, putting the lower notes an octave higher, but always keeping the fundamental in the bass. Always think of a triad as in 1, 3, 5 order, no matter in what order the notes are actually written.

When you are playing accompaniments, each cord you strike should (in general) contain the note of the melody that is sounded with the chord. You can study this out from the chart, but few persons should need more instruction on this point than the ear itself can give.

Persistence is necessary if you are to learn much from these lessons. You must play the chord over and over, first with the chart before you and then without, until you have committed it to memory. Commit to memory also the names of the keys that make up the different chords. This should give you sufficient knowledge for playing accompaniments. If you wish to go further in the study of the piano or organ, learn the fingering of the scales shown in upper left hand corner of each chart. Three chords follow the scales. Compare them with the chords shown in the main charts.

Every triad in black letter is marked 1, 3, 5. Always read it so, no matter in what vertical order the notes may be written. Note that the small letter D with a dash above it must not be played.

NEXT LESSON—Key of B Flat Major.

ROBOT TO WARN OF PLANE PERIL

Robots to tell an airplane pilot when his wings are subjected to dangerous strain have been successfully tested, and are expected to solve a problem in safe flying, according to announcement by S. M. Kintner, vice president in charge of engineering for the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

Consisting of two metal weights separated by a spring, the robots make electrical contact when the weights meet and the pilot is warned by a grid-glow tube lighting in the cockpit. As an airplane flies, wings hit air "pumps," Kintner says, which cause wing-strain. The robot can be adjusted to make contact only when the strain on the wings exceeds the safety factor, he says. The device has been tested on a standard mail plane.

INDEPENDENTS CALL MEETING

Officers of the East End Independent League have called a political meeting for next Thursday night in Peabody High School. They stated that there would be no announcement of candidacies for office and that no candidate would be indorsed.

Mrs. Frank J. Boyle, secretary of the organization, in outlining the purpose of the meeting, declared:

"The whole idea is that Pittsburgh and Allegheny County have been suffering from a lot of political ills which should be corrected, and the fall primary gives the people of this community a golden opportunity to begin the cure.

"Heretofore a large part of the efficacy of the independent vote has been lost through the lack of organization, and it is hoped that this meeting will be the start of a movement which will result in this loss being eliminated or minimized by the great mass of independent voters getting together in a cohesive organization, which will insure their efforts being well directed and efficiently co-ordinated and, more important still, that their votes shall be cast and counted.

"No one will be asked for any pledge or to commit himself to any candidate or policy. The meeting simply offers an opportunity to the honest, unbossed independent voters of the East End to get together and begin a movement which, if vigorously followed, will make their efforts worth while and their wishes regarded at the fall elections."

Other officers of the organization are Gen. Churchill Mehard, president; Frank I. Craig, vice president; Louis Donner, treasurer.

Mrs. Leahey is a patient in the Brown Memorial Hospital at Conneaut, O., suffering from fractures of both legs and other injuries.

The father, mother and daughter had driven to Erie during the day to confer with a local doctor specializing in diseases of crippled children and were on their way home when it is believed Leahey fell asleep, allowing the car to crash into a tree. He and his wife were thrown clear of the wreckage, but the girl was badly burned when the car took fire.

The quarrel started, police said, when Crimmel came to reclaim a baby carriage which he and his wife are said to have lent the Youngs' several days ago. Crimmel and Young, neighbors said, argued over possession of the carriage, then engaged in fisticuffs.

Mrs. Young, according to police, seized a shovel and struck Crimmel on the head.

Crimmel's skull was fractured. He died early today without regaining consciousness. Police took Mrs. Young in custody, but no charges have been lodged against her.

FORT DEARBORN REPLICA READY FOR WORLD FAIR

Garrison Destroyed After Massacre of 1812 Rebuilt For Chicago Celebration.

CHICAGO, May 16.—(AP.)—A little cluster of buildings that was once nearly all of Chicago, old Fort Dearborn, reconstructed on the lake front, was dedicated today as the first exhibit of the 1933 world's fair.

The garrison that was destroyed after the famous massacre of 1812 had risen again to become a cherished bit of history in the midst of all the brilliant modernism that is to be the "Century of Progress Exposition."

BUILT TO SCALE

In the ambitious plans of the fair management, the reproduction of the garrison erected in 1803 becomes comparatively insignificant. On the architects' model of the completed exposition, the fort is about the smallest thing on the spacious grounds.

But today, with some of the huge modernistic fair buildings under construction and others still figments of fertile imaginations, old Fort Dearborn held the spotlight alone.

It was built exactly to scale. Logs were shipped from Northern Wisconsin and old North woodsmen came down to teach the workmen how to cut and fit them.

What little hardware was used was all hand-forged; shingles were made by hand. The builders went to great pains to find imperfect glass, with many bubbles.

RAZED IN MASSACRE

Today's speakers, some of them descendants of early settlers, recalled how the spot where the Chicago River then bent south to empty into Lake Michigan, was considered a strategic point for a fort from the time the white man first set eyes on it; how the garrison was built in 1803 under the watchful eye of its designer, Capt. John Whistler, an old soldier with very definite ideas about defense; how it was destroyed in 1812 after most of the 96 persons who started for Detroit in an evacuation had been slain by Indians.

Capt. Whistler, grandfather of the painter, James Abbot Whistler, made possible the erection of the exact likeness of the fort through his detailed description written soon after it had been completed.

Five to Go on Trial For Red Disorders

Indicted with him and listed for trial at the same time are Joseph Mankin, labor representative, 153 Crawford street; Michael Burich and Edward Cook, living at the Improvement Hotel, and Miss Parthenia Hills, Negro, 1609 Wylie avenue. They were arrested during Communistic unemployment demonstrations here on February 26.

FRAUD SUSPECT MAY GIVE UP

CHICAGO, May 16.—(Universal)—John (Jake the Barber) Factor, accused with others in a gigantic $2,300,000 swindle in England, made overtures today looking toward his surrender.

The ex-barber, who is said to have once trimmed the Prince of Wales of a substantial amount at Le Tourquet playing chemin de fer, narrowly escaped arrest here when federal agents sought him and his alleged accomplice in recent frauds, Harry Green, in a raid upon their luxurious apartment.

His attorney, Walter Schwartz, telephoned United States Commissioner Edwin K. Walker today, asking what bail would be fixed if Factor surrendered. Schwartz was advised that Factor apparently would not be entitled to bail, since he was sought on an extradition warrant sworn out at the instance of the British consul here.

STATES DELAY REDISTRICTING

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(Universal.)—Failure of several states to reapportion their seats in the House, due to bitter political fights, is causing deep concern among Republican and Democratic leaders, it was disclosed today.

The outlook in such states is that all of the candidates for the House in 1932 will have to run at large, as candidates for the Senate do.

Such an event, lining up cities against rural sections, would have an important bearing upon the prohibition issue. It might also determine whether the Republicans or Democrats will control the House.

Instead of a candidate "stumping" his own district, he would be required to campaign in the entire state. Suggestions already are being made that in the event candidates have to run at large in states which fail to redistrict pursuant to the 1930 census, they pool their financial resources.

Under the Congressional Reapportionment act, 21 states lose 27 seats to 11 other states. States which gain could have their added seats contested for at large, but in states which lose, all candidates must run at large in the event the state Legislatures failed to pass a redistricting bill.

In competition with high school students throughout the state, Miss Elizabeth Roehrig, of 539 East Ohio street, North Side, a junior at St. Xavier Academy, Latrobe, has received the state prize award in the essay contest on the Paris Peace Pact, sponsored by the National Student Forum. A large facsimile of the pact has been awarded the academy, and a small copy presented Miss Roehrig. More than 200,000 students are enrolled in the forum, which represents 2,600 high schools. Miss Roehrig's essay is being considered for national honors.

Injured Salesman's Clothes, Papers Gone

Turtle at Morgue A. W. O. L.; Co-Owners Offer Reward

"Mike" is gone, disappeared into thin air, or rather into water. And a reward of $25 has been offered for his return.

"Mike" is a turtle, just about the size of a silver dollar, who rested in his aquarium in the Allegheny County Morgue. When Deputy Coroners Mullin Jackson and James Carroll, co-owners of "Mike," went to feed him, they discovered that "Mike" was A. W. O. L. "Mike" came to the morgue months ago to join a collection of gold fish. "Mike," however, used a plan of hiding in the rocks at the bottom of the aquarium and nipping off the tails of the gold fish when they came too close. Soon there wasn't much left of them, and the fish expired.

TRAVEL AND RESORT INFORMATION

PUSH PROGRESS ON NEW UNITED STATES LINERS

Twin Ocean Giants, Largest Ever Built in United States, Near Completion.

Work on the giant twin ocean liners, the largest ever built in this country, under construction in Camden, N. J., for the United States Lines, is being accelerated so that the first 30,000-ton vessel will be launched in December and ready for actual service in May of next year, according to officials of the line. Meanwhile progress on the second liner is such that the latter will be in the trans-Atlantic service early in 1933.

SEE INCREASE

Officials of the United States Lines declare that the trans-Atlantic business in 1933 will be unusually heavy because of the activities abroad. It is planned to have the first of the ships available to meet the demand for accommodations from delegates planning to go to the Eucharistic Congress in Dublin in July, 1932. Approximately 15,000 Americans are expected to attend this conclave.

At present there are 1,600 men engaged in the construction of the vessels, names for which have not yet been selected.

AID EMPLOYMENT

The vessels, costing approximately $20,000,000, in this manner accomplish a substantial part in maintaining employment during the period of depression.

The ships will have an overall length of 705 feet and will carry approximately 1,300 passengers at a cruising speed of more than 20 knots. Raked stem and cruiser stern will enhance the stream line effect. The super-structure will consist of three decks and the vessel will have two low, elliptical stacks.

Further Reductions In Fares Unlikely

Prospective travelers who have deferred bookings for the trans-Atlantic voyages in hopes of material reductions in first-class and possibly in cabin rates have been counseled that there will be no reductions by any of the lines until after the coming summer season. Whether there will be any shading of rates for the intermediate and winter season is problematical.

Santa Fe Extends Sleeping Car Service

C. H. Beach, district passenger agent of the Santa Fe system, has been advised that, effective June 1, through sleeping car service will be operated from Chicago to Denver on their train, The Chief, and also on the Grand Canyon Limited. Dining car service will be offered to passengers to or from Denver, Colorado Springs or Pueblo.

Denies Rumor Of Tourist Tax In Nova Scotia

Emphatic denial that a head tax would be levied on tourists or that the regular harbor charges for steamships would be increased has been made by Leonard W. Fraser, director of the department of information of the Province of Nova Scotia. Fraser further denied that there was anything but friendly rivalry for patronage between Halifax and other foreign ports now competing for the week-end or summer tourist business.

WESTERN RAIL FARES REDUCED

The lowest railroad fares from the Pacific Coast to eastern points in 15 years will go into effect July 1 for a four-month period, railroad officials have announced.

The Southern Pacific, Santa Fe, Union Pacific and Western Pacific, serving California, announced a $10 reduction in the one-way fare between California and Chicago, making the coach rate $40. Seven dollars and fifty cents will be sliced from the fare from San Francisco to Kansas City and Missouri River points, making the fare $32.50. Similar reductions were announced by railroads serving the Pacific Northwest, including the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Union Pacific and Milwaukee.

European Fashion Trip Announced

A fashion trip to Europe, designed for those who would welcome authoritative guidance in the selection of styles, has been announced by F. L. Hopkins, of the Fraser-McLean Travel Agency. The party will sail July 16 on the Cunard liner Samaria, and will return from Europe August 11, aboard the Tuscania. A woman who is well known as a fashion authority and who has had considerable experience in buying abroad, will accompany the party, so that members can avail themselves of her service at no charge, according to Hopkins.

PISGAH TROUT STREAMS OPEN

ASHEVILLE, N. C., May 16.—The choice fishing streams of the Pisgah National Game Preserve were opened yesterday to the angling enthusiasts for a period of 30 days, and many visitors from Pittsburgh are expected to take advantage of the sports opportunity which these well-stocked streams offer. The supply of trout in the brooks and creeks of the area, is annually renewed and fishing is carefully regulated to prevent depletion of the supply. Other good fishing streams, many hundreds of miles of them, in fact, are now open to anglers in Western North Carolina and will remain open until September 1.

The late spring season offers much that is of interest to Pittsburgh visitors. Golf is claiming the usual large number of devotees and many sojourners have heeded the call of the bridle trails through the mountains. The gardens of Biltmore House, with their brilliant display of spring flowers, are of interest to many visitors.

POLICE SEEKING TO BALK 26 IN 'SUICIDE CLUB'

Death Cult of Aged Bared By Spinster After Four End Lives; Prayers Fail.

NEW YORK, May 16.—(AP.)—Acting on a spinster's tale of a "suicide club" with 26 living members, the law machinery of two Long Island counties was set in motion today to avert the possibility in the minds of some detectives, of a series of suicides.

District Attorneys Edwards, of Nassau, and Blue, of Suffolk, with a score of detectives, investigated a theory that four members of the cult of elderly, ailing persons already had killed themselves in accordance with a ritual.

The supposed cult was described yesterday by Miss Louise Schwarz, 59, in telling of the death of her brother, Edward, 55, who was found shot in his home at West Amityville last Wednesday.

PLEADS NOT GUILTY

Indicted in connection with the shooting, Miss Schwarz pleaded not guilty when arraigned today on a charge of murder in the second degree. Her attorney secured the appointment of a lunacy commission to examine her.

Describing operations of the "Suicide Club," Miss Schwarz said:

"Every Sunday night we met at the home of a member to pray that one of us would be cured of our feebleness. There were 30 members. Four of them are dead.

"If the member we prayed for was not receptive to our prayers, he was bound to commit suicide. If he failed to end his own life before the next meeting, he was to be slain by a chosen member of the cult.

MEMBER FOUND HANGED

"On April 26 we met at the home of George Breitenbach, 59, who lived near us. He was not receptive."

The next day the body of Breitenbach was found hanging in the cellar of his home, authorities said. They would not disclose any other names of alleged members of the cult, living or dead, although it was learned each of the 26 named by Miss Schwarz will be questioned.

Last Sunday, Miss Schwarz was quoted as saying, the club met and prayed for her brother. Medical examiners said the location of wounds on the brother's head indicated he could not have fired the shots which killed him.

SANDINO FORCE ATTACKS TOWN

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—An attack upon the town of Palacaguima, in the Northwestern part of Nicaragua, by about 100 insurgents using machine guns, rifles and hand grenades, was reported today to the Navy Department.

Col. F. B. Garrett, commanding the 2nd Brigade of Marines at Managua, said the attack lasted about three hours yesterday morning, and that many houses were damaged by bombs and rifle fire. He said there were no casualties among the Nicaraguan guardia defending the town, but that the insurgents were thought to have had several men killed and wounded.

The attackers withdrew after looting two stores. Troops pursued them and planes flew in search of the insurgents after the action, Col. Garrett said, without result.

Wife Asks Divorce On Cruelty Charge

"HALF SICK" WEAK-NERVOUS

Man or Woman—Would You?

Would you give thanks to be strong, energetic, charming and dominant amongst your associates?

You should be strong, healthy, vigorous—it is your God-given right!

You have become unattractive, uninteresting, because of a serious "deficiency" in your blood and nerves.

This must be true, or you would not be weak, nervous, tired and "half-sick" day after day.

The fact is, your blood and nerves are in great need of vital substances, with which to produce nerve fluid, which in turn generates nerve Force—a mysterious unseen energy that resembles electricity—which gives you vitality, exact ambition, keen mind and strength to endure, which makes you movement, cheerful, aggressive and attractive to your friends.

Every thought, every action uses up Nerve Force. If the supply is limited and used up faster than produced, your body becomes partly ill and your mind loses its keenness. Many describe this loss of Nerve Force with such terms as: "Weak and Run-down," "Always Tired," "Always Worrying," "Nervous Indigestion," "Sleeplessness," "Dizzy Spells," "Cold Hands and Feet," and "Oppressed Feeling."

When such conditions exist, place reliance in Cad-o-mene, and the sooner the better. Let Cad-o-mene build up your lowered vitality. Cad-o-mene is different from any medicine you have ever used. It was originated for those who are "half-sick," for those who have sick nerves, poor quality of blood and lowered vitality. Surely such a medicine is worth trying.

Cadomene Tablets supplies that which your blood and nerves require to aid nature when Nerve Force is being slowly exhausted—and taking Cadomene a few days proves it to the most skeptical.

Quickly a feeling of renewed strength and well-being begins to let you know that the vital elements in Cadomene are proper and necessary for the anemic run-down, debilitated "half-sick" person, be it man, woman, boy or girl.

In Pittsburgh you can procure Cad-o-mene Tablets at May-Liggett's, Dow's, Mayflower, Walgreen's and good druggists everywhere.

SCREEN WRITER TO REVEAL LIFE OF CLARA BOW

'It' Girl Has Given Full Support to Life Story Starting in Sun-Telegraph

HOLLYWOOD, Cal. May 16.—(Universal)—No group of individuals in the public eye arouses and holds public interest as much as does the screen players, since nowdays the screen is the world's most popular entertainment, all the year round.

Who are they—what are they like—what do they do off the screen? Millions want to know.

And no screen player has held more public interest than Clara Bow—young, rollicking, red-haired, figuresome, devil-may-care star.

Just what is Clara like? From what environment did she come to the screen. What is her REAL history?

BEGINS TOMORROW

All these questions, and a legion more, will be answered in a fascinating thrilling series of stories by Louella Parsons, publication of which begins in Monday's Sun-Telegraph.

Friend of all the movie-world; motion picture editor for the Universal Service and the Hearst Newspapers; critic, historian and entertaining writer, Miss Parsons, with her understanding of her subject, is the ideal biographer for Clara. And, indeed, for this particularly revealing series of stories, she was the only one considered by Clara and her father, Robert Bow.

A "different" sort of child was Clara, from the very time of her birth in Brooklyn. She shone and sparkled in her poverty-stricken neighborhood. And at school. And in the little school entertainments. She fascinated, even in those early days.

ROSE FROM BOTTOM

Miss Parsons has from the star and her father all the intimate details of her childhood and girlhood, and has set them down faithfully.

Clara's motion picture career—how she began it, how she remained "different" throughout it, how she rose from the bottom to the top—is a story that with Miss Parsons' handling holds interest from beginning to end.

And by no means overlooked are her romances—her love affairs with this man and that man—which have been gossiped about so much. Clara talked frankly about them with her biographer. The biographer wrote them as frankly. Each is in itself a complete story.

Only in the Sun-Telegraph in this city will this fascinating story of Clara Bow appear. Already there has been a tremendous demand for this issue of Monday—and those who read the narrative will be rewarded.

Mexico Arrests Hostile Indians

MEXICO CITY, May 16.—(AP.)—A Ciudad Chihuahua dispatch to Excelsior today said that four Tarahumara Indian chiefs had been arrested by federal troops in the Alta Tarahumara country, where troops have been sent to pacify Indians. Another chief died of wounds received when resisting arrest.

The Indians have adopted a menacing attitude toward ranchers of the neighborhood, who, it is alleged, have maltreated them. The arrests followed refusal of one of the chiefs to agree to conciliatory measures proposed by Maj. Enrique Davilas. Eighteen tribes were involved, but the other chiefs agreed to abandon their hostile attitude.

2 Women Fugitives Captured, 2 Free

COLUMBUS, O., May 16.—(AP.)—Two of the four women inmates of Marysville State Reformatory who escaped yesterday were captured here today by police. They are Mrs. Marie Flesch, 23, Dayton, and Mrs. Zelma Long Theodore, Middletown. They were arrested at the former home of Mrs. Flesch.

Two are yet unapprehended. They are Anna Bandon, 20, Lakewood, and Jessie Parsons, 20, Crooksville.

6 Chinese Strike Terrorists Caught

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16.—(AP.)—Six Chinese who, police said, had been imported as "terrorists" in a Chinese laundry strike here were arrested on a train early today. Several guns and ammunition were seized.

After examining confiscated papers police announced they had forestalled the first excursion of the gunmen for which they were to be paid $1,500 for each non-union laundry worker or proprietor killed.

and Ellis moved Mate up with Twenty Grand.

As they raced around the far turn, Kurtzinger hit Twenty Grand with his whip and the big horse lunged past Mate. Prince D'Amour had died away, and Sweep All was now in front. On came Twenty Grand, turning into the stretch for home, his long legs carrying him over the ground in tremendous leaps.

Now he had Sweep All by the head, and for an eighth of a mile they raced close together, but an eighth of a mile out Twenty Grand began pulling away. Sweep All was done. The Greentree horse was all alone as he crossed the finish, and he kept on running halfway around the track again.

A huge crowd rushed out on the track to await the return of the winner, and, as Kurtsinger trotted his horse back to the judges' stand, the police had a hard time keeping the spectators from overwhelming horse and rider. They had a wreath of roses for Twenty Grand, and his owner, Mrs. Whitney, in a white hat, and all smiles, shook hands with Jockey Kurtsinger.

WINNER IS HAILED

Vice President Curtis, who used to be a jockey himself, congratulated Kurtsinger, as did the Governor of Kentucky, Flem D. Sampson. Twenty Grand was led up in front of the judges' stand by his proud young trainer, Jimmy Rowe, son of the famous old Jim, who trained horses for Harry Payne Whitney. Old Jim is dead. It would have been a great day for him, this, to see his boy leading in the winner of a Kentucky Derby.

MEET IS WON BY WASHINGTON

By JESS CARVER.

Washington High School's valiant warriors of the track and the field led an entry of 40 schools and a scoring band of 25 to the tape to win the annual W. P. I. A. L. championship meet in the Stadium yesterday afternoon. The Washingtonians, a decided dark horse in pre-meet rating, scored 20 points in five events, landing a first, two seconds, one third and one fourth place.

In second place trailed Uniontown, whose youngsters accounted for three first places. Uniontown tallied 18 points. Connellsville, another outsider, was third with 17; New Brighton, fourth with 16; Ford City and Ellwood City tied for fifth with 15 and Tarentum seventh with 13½. New Castle was the last school to land in the double figure rating, scoring 13.

Thus Washington returned to the honor position it had not held since the crack squad of 1928, led by the stellar Bill Miller, won the team title. Washington also won in 1927.

TWO RECORDS BROKEN

Two records went by the boards in yesterday's meet, both in the field. One double winner was crowned, and a skillet full of red-hot favorites defeated. There hasn't been a meet held during the past five years in which so many surprise champions have been crowned.

Eddie Dooms, of Uniontown High School, lithe, cinder-burning Negro lad, was the high individual point scorer. Dooms won both the 100 and the 220-yard dashes, and, running as anchor man on the crack mile relay team, picked up the extra point and one-quarter he needed to annex the individual honors.

Johnny Murphy, Butler High luminary, who makes a specialty of breaking javelin records, broke the first standard of the day when he "got hold of one," as the cognoscenti of the field tell you, and hurled the spear 186 feet 7 inches, to break the old mark, set in 1929 by Joe Beggs, of Aliquippa, by better than 11 feet. Murphy broke the record in the Pitt interscholastics a week ago with a heave of 174 feet.

NICKSICH STARS

Mike Nicksich, of Burgettstown, one of the first upstarts to cop a first, heaved the 12-pound shot 46 feet 2¾ inches. Mitter Markovich, of Aliquippa, had set the previous high mark with a 45-foot heave last spring.

That completed the record bursting, but the closeness of the competition with Washington, Ford City, New Brighton, Ellwood City, New Castle, Connellsville and Tarentum making a fight all the way, made up for the lack of sensationalism that usually attends the cracking of hoary times and measurements.

O'Dile Pryor, of Ford City, favored to win both the 100 and the 220-yard dashes, won neither, but he did turn up unexpectedly to

Notes—Twenty Grand, much the best and slow to begin, was sent up slowly after a half-mile, raced up strongly on outside at second turn, and, wearing down Sweep All, drew away fast and had speed in reserve. Sweep All broke slowly, but saved ground working up fast in first quarter. Followed the leaders under restraint in back stretch and raced into a good lead at stretch turn, but could not withstand the winner, yet was widely best of others. Mate improved his position fast in first quarter, saved ground at second turn and failed to rally under vigorous driving in stretch. Spanish Play began slowly and closed with good courage. Boys Howdy began fast and finished well, after dropping back on far turn. Insco held on well. Pittsburgher began slowly, met early interference and was never a factor. Ladder quit badly after one mile. Prince d'Amour had early speed.

Robins Nose Out Reds, 2-1

BROOKLYN, May 16.—(AP.)—Johnny Frederick's triple, followed by Rube Bressler's long fly in the ninth inning, gave the Brooklyn Robins a 2-to-1 decision over the Cincinnati Reds today. The two teams went into the ninth deadlocked as the result of a pitching duel between Johnson and Vance. Johnson might have won had not Wright's fly in the second inning fell for a triple when Heathcote lost it in the sun. The Robins' shortstop scored on Gilbert's single. The score:

Foreleg Crack Keeps Equipoise Out of Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 16.—(AP.)—The belated withdrawal of Equipoise, star of Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney's stable and champion 2-year-old money winner of 1930, marked the first time in many years that the winter book favorite failed to go to the post for the Kentucky Derby.

Although there had been rumors and conflicting reports of Equipoise's condition ever since his defeats in Maryland, most of the colt's backers held out to the last that he not only would run, but had a strong chance to make a comeback and win.

It was estimated upwards of $1,000,000 was lost by those who had bet on Equipoise in future books all over the country, but especially in the East.

The mystery surrounding Equipoise's condition, which apparently had baffled veterinarians as well as trainers, was solved by discovery of a hidden quarter-crack, in other words, a seam in the right front foreleg sufficient to cause the horse pain in running and to account for his erratic performances.

It was not discovered, according to Trainer Freddie Hopkins, until this morning. Previously, the assumption was that Equipoise had experienced a spell of azoturia, a kidney ailment.

ST. LOUIS, May 16.—(AP.)—Cronin tripled in the eleventh inning to send in two Senators to break a tie and give Washington a 9-to-7 game with the St. Louis Browns today.

Jeannette Quits Mid-Atlantic Loop

LORETTO, Pa., May 16.—(AP.)—The Jeannette Club, of the Middle Atlantic League, has surrendered its franchise, Elmer Daily, president of the league, said today.

The club will not be disbanded for the present, Daily said, pending efforts to place the franchise with some other city, and for the next six days, at least, the regular schedule will be kept under the guidance of Daily.

Daily said he believed there would be little difficulty in obtaining backers for the club in some other city. He said financial conditions of the club were responsible for the decision of the Jeannette owners to surrender the franchise they have held since 1926, one year after the league was organized.

The league president said he was loath to see the circuit fail in its first attempt to maintain a 12-club league, but that he was grateful to the Jeannette club for reaching a decision early in the season, rather than later when conditions were less favorable for obtaining other backers of the club.

BOSTON, May 16. — Bill McKechnie's warlike Braves snapped the winning streak of the Pirates this afternoon as the intersectional rivals staged their first battle of the year. Long Tom Zachary, who made the Buccos jump through last season, was in fine fettle as he held the Pittsburghers to five hits. The Tribe hit Remy Kremer freely and the Frenchman was given poor support. The score was 9 to 2, the setback being the first the Pirates suffered in four fights in the East.

Tom Zachary

There was a spice and dash to the play of Clan McKechnie which was lacking in the Pittsburgh athletes. The light-hitting Buccos showed signs of coming out of their hitting slump yesterday, but in their inaugural with the Braves, Zachary made them appear as docile as a team of twilight leaguers.

HELD AT SECOND

An early tip was given by the Pirates in the first round. Brother Lloyd whipped a double to left to open the game. But Brother Paul,

BOBBY JONES' Lessons in Golf

By Robert Tyre Jones.

American Open, British Open, American Amateur and British Amateur Champion.

A Pasadena motorcycle policeman who was working with me in one of my pictures recently, made an observation which struck me with great force. We were all standing by waiting for a four-ball match to go through before we could make the scene. One of the players was playing a brassie shot, and the cop was watching him closely. Painfully the player set himself, carefully he placed his feet, and fearfully he began the stroke.

Bobby Jones

"There," said the cop, "there is a man who is trying to learn to play golf like I did. I'll bet he read a book on the game before he ever went out to play. He is doing everything mechanically. Mr. Jones, don't you think a man ought first to try to play naturally for a while, and then try to improve on what he has?"

There is a great deal of meat in the policeman's idea. Apparently he was an enthusiastic golfer—almost everyone in California is—and he had given about as much thought to the game as he had to his revolver practice, which he was missing that afternoon.

Early Start Aid

Of course, I believe sincerely in competent instruction. I don't believe there is any such thing as a purely natural golfer, chiefly because hitting a golf ball is not a thing which comes naturally to a human being. But our best players have always been those who started the game when they were young—and almost always those who began by imitating consciously or unconsciously, some fine stylist. These youngsters needed instruction; there was always plenty for them to learn; but they found for themselves a comfortable, easy beginning, a groundwork which suited their bodies, or which could be adapted to their physical peculiarities.

After a man has become a few years older he cannot hope to pick up the rhythm as quickly as a child. But I think it is a mistake to try to graft upon him, by instruction in successive details, a swing purely synthetically created. In other words, I don't believe you can get anywhere by taking a greenhorn and teaching him step by step the separate movements of the swing and expect him in the end to put them all together into a workable whole.

Idea Praised

The policeman's idea is more or less my own. In the very beginning, a man should be told how to hold his club, and he should be given some idea of what the swing should look like. But beyond that I think it best to let him alone for a while. Let him get for himself the sense of swinging the club, let him find out something of what it feels like, and then correct him, always with proper regard for whatever tendencies he has manifested in his first halting steps.

My present picture series has been started with putting. This was done with a purpose, because the putting stroke as a stroke is the simplest of all—even though the matter of getting the ball into the hole may be comparatively difficult. Many years ago someone wrote a book about a man who learned to play golf by starting with a two-foot putt and working out, gradually working himself into the "feel" of the longer clubs.

Every golfer, young or old, needs personal, thoughtful, instruction—but it should never be allowed to produce a mechanical swing. Let the result be fundamentally sound, of course, but individual all the same.

TWO RECORDS BROKEN, MANY FAVORITES BOW

Uniontown Second, Connellsville Third, New Brighton Fourth in Stadium Meet.

Javelin and Shot Put Marks Are Bettered; Dooms Is High Individual Scorer.

cop the 440. Ford City was out to win the meet, if possible, and ran poor Pryor to death. The result was that Dooms repeated his triumph over O'Dile in the 100 of the Geneva meet and followed up with a victory in the furious. Pryor was so run out that he did not qualify for the final heat of the latter race.

Skomesney, of Dunbar Township, just missed equaling the record in the broad jump by one inch. He covered 21 feet, 2 inches and needed 21 feet, 2½ inches.

WILKINSBURG BOY HURT

Johnny Grim, of New Brighton and Ed Strous, of Ellwood City, split the hurdles. Grim captured the highs and Strous the lows. Grim, by the way, took second honors in the individual scoring, with 10 points. He had a first in the hurdles, a third in the broad jump and a fourth in the discus, which, to say the least, was a very versatile performance.

Swoney, of Ford City, took the half-mile. Coburn, of Washington, one of the favorites to crash through, won the mile. Lash, of Beaver Falls, the pole vault and Link, of Monessen, and Donner, of Tarentum, tied for the high jump.

Washington might have been jerked back into a tie for top honors had Kearns, of Connellsville, won the pole vault instead of tieing with four others for second. A first place would have given the team a tie with the winners.

Shirey, of Wilkinsburg, was injured when his pole broke as he took his last vault at 11 feet 6 inches. He suffered a bad fall and was taken to the Columbia Hospital. Roush, of Beaver, also took a bad spill when his pole was cracked.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT (Reg. by U. S. Patent Office) By Robert L. Ripley

(On request, sent with stamped, addressed envelope, Ripley will furnish proof of anything depicted by him in these cartoons.)

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF LAST SUNDAY: DIOCLES WON 1,462 CHARIOT RACES—In ancient times chariot racing was the favorite sport throughout the nations of Persia, Egypt, Greece and the Roman Empire, and the heroes of the game were not only idolized by their people, but received enormous compensations. Over a period of 24 years, Diocles, famous Roman charioteer, piloted his teams in 4,257 races and was victorious in 1,462 of them. His earnings amounted to between $1,400,000 and $2,000,000. (See: "Second Latin," Scudder (Allyn & Bacon), or "Latin Practice Book," by Guy C. Forsman.) THE MAN MONKEY OF CEYLON—My sketch of the "Man Monkey" was made from life when I was searching for "Believe It Or Not" material in and around the city of Kandy, Ceylon. The amazing speed with which these people climb a tall cocoanut palm tree is made possible by a large loose loop of cloth around their ankles, which holds them to the tree as they jump up in their frog-like fashion. DINIZ CELEBRATED 119 CHRISTMASES IN THE SAME HOUSE—Diniz, of S. Joao, Portugal, was born in a fishing hut on the banks of the river Douro on Christmas Day, and died on the one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of his birth, in 1906. He celebrated 119 successive Christmases in the same fishing hut. (See: Prof. Evart's "Life of the Macrobii.")

JOHNNIES BEAT CUMBERLAND IN ELEVENTH, 5–4

Synott's Wild Pitch With Bases Loaded and None Out Decides Close Battle.

Duberutein, Mackey and Daviu Shine at Bat; Koch Stars in Generals' Victory.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., May 16.—Johnstown defeated Cumberland, 5-4, in another thrilling game here today when Synott, Cumberland pitcher, made a wild pitch with the bases full and none out in the last half of the eleventh inning. Thomas led off for Johnstown in the eleventh and drew a walk. Costa singled through short, advancing Thomas to third. Bishop was intentionally passed and Pritchard, who had clouted two home runs previously in the game, was at bat when Synott cut loose with his wild pitch.

Long distance hitting by Duberutein, Mackey and Daviu also featured. The score:

AGEE VICTOR IN MARATHON

BALTIMORE, May 16.—(AP.)—William Agee won the National A. A. U. marathon championship today by beating exactly 100 other distance runners in the ninth annual Laurel-Baltimore race in record time.

The Baltimorean, twice before winner of the event, former national 15-mile titleholder, six times South Atlantic cross-country champion, and member of the 1928 Olympic team, took the lead less than 100 yards from the start and steadily increased it.

When he broke the tape in the War Memorial Plaza in the downtown section after the 26-mile, 285-yard grind, he was two miles ahead of the defending champion, Karl Koski, of the Finnish-American Athletic Club, of New York, who won the championship race last year at Staten Island.

Agee's time of 2 hours 32 minutes 38 seconds broke the record of 2 hours and 41 minutes set in 1925 by Frank Zuna, of New York.

Koski, running on an unfamiliar course, finished in 2 hours 44 minutes. Arthur Garvin, of the Millrose A. C., New York, was third in 2:47:1; Albert Michaelson, of the same club, fourth in 2:47:58, and David Fagerlund, teammate of Koski, was fifth in 2:57:48.

In sixth place was Tom Barry, Lynn, Mass., and the next four, in order, were Frank Jerry, New Castle, Pa.; Alex C. Meutsis, of the Greek-American Club, New York; Lawrence Reed, Lynn, and Mike Flomp, of Jamestown, N. Y.

Pfarr and Kirsch, Pittsburgh entrants, failed to finish.

A girl, Gazella E. Weinreich, 18, of Baltimore, for the first time on record here, was ready to start the long race when a telegram arrived from Daniel Ferris, A. A. U. secretary at New York, ruling that the girl was ineligible.

Sacrifice Fly Repeal to Cut Averages Only Slightly

JAMES J. LONG Sport Comment

Comparative Buc Marks. Difference Not Great. Fistic Timing Solved. | Racing Minus Jockeys. Metzger Not to Coach. Hurdler's Bright Future.

BATTING REDUCTIONS OVERESTIMATED

THERE IS MUCH speculation among baseball men as to the extent to which batting averages in the major leagues will be affected this year by the abolition of the sacrifice fly.

Naturally, the charging of times at bat from which the hitters were previously exempt when they poled out flies on which base runners advanced is going to mean a drop in hitting figures, but the depth of the cut is a question that has the dopestars guessing.

NO LINE ON the probable difference can be obtained from the official major league records of past years. This for the reason that sacrifice flies were not separated in the compilation.

The two varieties were counted together and the records showed merely that a player had made a certain number of sacrifices without specifying how many of them had been of the kind which this season are going into the box scores as times at bat.

IN ORDER TO make an accurate check-up next fall on the extent to which averages have been reduced by the elimination of the sacrifice fly, President John A. Heydler has instructed National League official scorers to add to their reports the number of times each player advances a runner with a fly ball other than a hit.

Meanwhile, players, critics and fans are doing a heap of conjecturing. The athletes fear that the repeal of the old rule is going to play havoc with their batting marks, and the size of the cut that will result is being variously estimated at from 20 to 30 points.

HOWEVER, IF PIRATE records may be accepted as a fair basis of computation as to what the general effect will be, the slice taken off the averages will not be nearly as big as has been surmised. Going back over the 154 games played by the Pittsburgh club last year and separating the sacrifice flies from the sacrifice bunts, it is found that the difference made in the averages of the Buccaneer regulars by the sacrifice fly ranged only from five to 13 points.

CAPTAIN PIE TRAYNOR, with 19 to his credit, made more sacrifice flies in 1930 than any other Pirate. He played in 130 games. Adam Comorosky ranked next with 18 in 152 games, and Dick Bartell was third with 13 in 129 engagements.

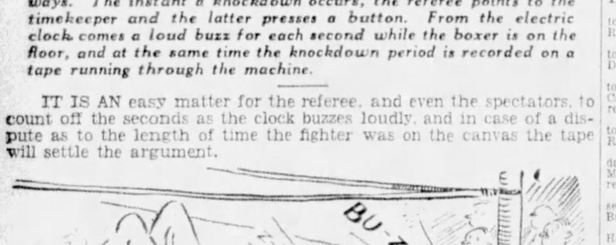
George Grantham made 12 in 146 games; Gus Suhr, 11 in 151 games; Paul Waner, 10 in 145 games; Ralston Hemsley, 8 in 104 games, and Lloyd Waner, 3 in 68 games. If those sacrifice flies had been counted as times at bat, as is being done this year, the difference in the averages would have been comparatively slight.

TRAYNOR WOULD HAVE suffered the only loss running into two figures. His average would have been cut from .366 to .353, a drop of 13 points. Bartell would have fallen from .320 to .311 and Comorosky from .313 to .304, a loss of nine points each. Grantham's mark would have been reduced seven points, from .324 to .317.

Paul Waner would have come down from .368 to .362, Suhr from .286 to .280, and Hemsley from .253 to .247, a loss of six points each, and Lloyd Waner would have dropped from .362 to .357, a reduction of five points. The average individual loss among the eight Pirates would have been less than six points, and the club average would have fallen only from .303 to .298. So the elimination of the sacrifice fly probably will not hurt averages as greatly as has been conjectured.

THE PROBLEM OF timing knockdowns in boxing bouts accurately and averting long or short counts over a fallen fighter appears to have been solved by the Penn A. C., of Philadelphia. A clock has been devised that does away with all guessing. In addition to timing the rounds, it times knockdowns in two different ways. The instant a knockdown occurs, the referee points to the timekeeper and the latter presses a button. From the electric clock comes a loud buzz for each second while the boxer is on the floor, and at the same time the knockdown period is recorded on a tape running through the machine.

IT IS AN easy matter for the referee, and even the spectators, to count off the seconds as the clock buzzes loudly, and in case of a dispute as to the length of time the fighter was on the canvas the tape will settle the argument.



A further improvement is planned in the form of a row of numbers from 1 to 10, which will be illuminated in turn as the knockdown count progresses. Those not seeing the buzz may see the lights. Something of the sort was needed to bring about better knockdown counting, and the idea might well be adopted at all the big fight clubs.

HORSE RACING WITHOUT jockeys soon is to get a real test, as Mario Casagualda, former riding instructor at the National Military Academy in Mexico City, says he means to go through with his plan to hold a season of that kind at the greyhound track in that city.

Casagualda has trained 20 horses to race without jockeys. They are trained to jump from their portable stalls when the rope barrier is pulled and to race around the track at top speed. Casagualda says that by eliminating the jockeys, the possibility of unfair tactics is greatly reduced.

PRESENT-DAY FOOTBALL coaches include more men from Notre Dame than from any other college. One of the last year's luminaries, however, has declined all proposals of that nature. He is Bert Metzger, the sensational 149-pound guard. Dutch Bergman, coach at Catholic University in Washington, where Metzger assisted in the spring training, made him a good offer to join the staff next fall, and several other schools also sought Bert's services. But Metzger announces that he is giving up football, and that afte he gets his diploma at Notre Dame next month he will go to work for a dairy company in Chicago, of which his father is an executive and a director.

EVEN IF THE world record of 14.3 seconds which Jack Keller, Ohio State's sophomore star, recently set for the 120-yard high hurdles, is rejected on the ground that he knocked over two hurdles, it won't be long, track experts believe, before he turns in other sensational marks.

The tremendous speed and hurdling powers Keller showed in lowering the world time of 14.4 seconds set by Earl Thompson 11 years ago will carry him far. Already recognized as the greatest hurdler in the college ranks, though only 19, Keller appears certain to enrich track history with more than one new record before he is done. Rarely has a sophomore athlete shown such vast possibilities.

THREE RECORDS SET BY GIRLS IN A. M. A. MEET

Dash, Relay and Baseball Throw Marks Fall in Senior Tests at Kennywood.

Patton High Entrant Upsets Dope in Winning 220-Yd. Dash; Jane Laird Stars.

Three records went by the boards in the Senior Allegheny Mountain Association annual track and field meet held yesterday at Kennywood Park. Betty Bowser, wearing the colors of the State Normal College, clipped a fraction of a second off the record in the 50-yard dash. Jane Laird, not to be outdone by her teammate, set a record in the baseball throw that may stand for a long time, hurling the horsehide 16 feet further than Ruth Miller did two years ago.

The best effort, however, was a concerted one by the Slippery Rock track team, which won the 440 relay and clipped approximately nine seconds off the mark made by the State Teachers last year.

The 220-yard dash proved to be the big upset of the meet. Patton High School entered a girl named Eckenrod, and she ran a beautiful race to win from Enda Schenk, of the Teachers' State College, and Ruth Comer, of Miles Bryan High School. The summary:

Derbyites See Gallant Knight Shatter Record

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 16.—(AP.)—The fast condition of the Churchill Downs track for the Kentucky Derby today was attested when Gallant Knight, runner-up to Gallant Fox in the 1930 Derby, raced to a new world record of 1 minute 16 1-5 seconds for six and a half furlongs in winning the fourth race, immediately preceding the Derby.

The Audley Farm's 4-year-old, ridden by Jockey H. Schutte, set the new mark in beating Miss Blanche Watson's Nostaw by three lengths and E. F. Prichard's Tannery, another Derby favorite last year.

Gallant Knight's time wiped out the world record of 1:17, set by the Whitney colt, Boojum, as a 2-year-old in 1929 at Saratoga. The former Churchill Downs track record was 1:17 3-5.

CHURCHILL DOWNS MUTUELS

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 16.—(Special.)—The mutuels on the seven races at the Churchill Downs race track today paid $220.54.

Pirates Set Down By Braves, 9 to 2

Grantham and Traynor left him stranded on second and Long Tom proceeded to hold the Freebooters to four additional safeties.

A double error by George Grantham with two out and two on in the third hurt the Buccaneer cause. Grantham failed to hold Worthington's roller and then he made a bad toss to Kremer, who seemed slow in covering the bag. The messed-up play made our boys look bad and they didn't look "too good" at any part of the battle. It was painful to see them swinging at the slants served by Zachary, whose control indicated he would be on the ropes if a couple of Pirates had delivered hits.

Bill Regan, Oakland boy with the Pirates, missed a home run by a narrow margin when he clouted the ball against the left field bleachers. The double scored a run for the Pirates in the sixth. Red Worthington, one of the Braves, started the assault on Kremer when he came up to lead off in the second. Red tripled to deep right and he pranced over on Sheely's long fly to Brother Lloyd.

Freddie Maguire, often a pain to the Pirates, singled to center to start the third. Zachary fanned, but Rabbit waited for a pass and then Dreesen doubled to right to score Maguire. Traynor held both runners when he threw out Berger, but Grantham made two errors on Worthington's bounder and two runs went over.

Phillips walked to start the fifth, but Thevenow and Kremer fanned. Phillips went to second on a balk by Zachary and he scored a moment later when Sheely threw wide to Zachary on L. Waner's tap.

BERGER SCORES TWO

Zachary opened the home half with a single to right and Rabbit beat out a tap. Both advanced as Dreesen rolled out to Grantham and Berger drove the pair of runs home with a single, when an intentional pass to the hard hitter would have made force plays at every base.

Grantham started the sixth with a single but was still on first with two out when Regan doubled against the left field fence to score George. Schulmerich singled on the infield for the Braves. He advanced on an infield out and scored on Maguire's scratch hit to center.

Maranville's hot double to left center opened the seventh for the Braves. Paul Waner backed almost against the bleachers for a one-hand catch of Dreesen's drive, Rabbit taking third. Berger singled to center to score Maranville. Worthington hit to right for a triple.

COULTER STARS AS TECH LOSES

Carnegie Tech's winning streak in track was broken yesterday when Geneva College scored a neat 81-to-54 victory over the Plaid in the Tech Bowl, but there was sweet solace for the Tartans in defeat when Tom Coulter, brilliant sophomore, turned in probably the most brilliant individual performance in the history of Skibo track sports.

The big boy went to the post in four events—the high hurdles, the low hurdles, the quarter-mile and the broad jump, and won all of them, setting one school record, breaking one track mark and equaling the best performance of any Carnegie man in another. Virtually exhausted by his work in the hurdles and the quarter, Coulter entered the broad jump, and, on his final leap, reached almost 21 feet to win the event.

SCORES 20 POINTS

Single-handed, he contributed 20 points to Carnegie's total, almost as many as the balance of the team combined. The blonde Canadian received a tremendous ovation after his winning leap in the broad jump, the final event.

The Covenanters brought a well-balanced, smooth aggregation to Pittsburgh, and fully deserved their triumph. They won eight first places and shut out the Plaid in the two-mile run.

Geneva showed a great miler in Wilson, who won in 4:36 8-10, pulled up. Few men ever have run a mile faster on Tech's five-lap track.

Coulter started his brilliant performance in the first event in the afternoon, when he won the high hurdles in 15 4-10 seconds to tie Jimmy Robertson's record, which has stood unchallenged since 1923. Pitted against Spencer, who last week set an unofficial record of 12 5-10 in the low hurdles, Coulter again was first to the tape in 13 seconds flat, a new Tech mark.

EQUALS TECH RECORD

Between these events, he competed in the quarter-mile dash and Evans pushed him to his track record of 50 seconds around four turns. Two watches caught him at 49 8-10 seconds, which would have equaled the Tech record, set by Nease two years ago. It is possible that he would have touched world record time on a straight-away course. The summary:

100-yard dash—Won by Sauer, Geneva; Thomas Geneva, second; Nease, Tech, third. Time, :10 2-10.

220-yard dash—Won by Thomas, Geneva; Sauer, Geneva, second; Nease, Tech, third. Time, :22 6-10.

440-yard dash—Won by Coulter, Tech; Evans, Geneva, second; Sands, Geneva, third. Time, :50. (New track record.)

Half-mile run—Won by Sheffard, Geneva and Nulton, Geneva, tied; Frank, Tech, third. Time, 2:08 2-10.

One-mile run—Won by Wilson, Geneva; Ramsey, Tech, second; Inglefield, Geneva, third. Time, 4:36 8-10.

Two-mile run—Won by Hunter, Geneva; Douthit, Geneva, second; Ray, Geneva, third. Time, 10:34 8-10.

120-yard high hurdles—Won by Coulter, Tech; Webster, Geneva, second; Ewing, Geneva, third. Time, :15.4. (Ties—Tech record.)

120-yard low hurdles—Won by Coulter, Tech; Spencer, Geneva, second; Evans, Geneva, third. Time, :13. (New Tech record.)

Shot put—Won by Seyboth, Tech; Karcis, Tech, second; Blain, Tech, third. Distance, 40 feet 3½ inches.

High jump—Won by Spencer, Geneva; Moore, Geneva; Mansell, Geneva; Long, Tech, and Houston, Tech, tied for second. Height, 6 feet.

Pole vault—Moore, Geneva, and Aultman, Geneva, tied for first; Barger, Tech, and Schmitt, Tech, tied for third. Height, 11 feet 6 inches.

Broad jump—Won by Coulter, Tech; Sands, Geneva, second; Moore, Geneva, third. Distance, 20 feet 11¾ inches.

Javelin throw—Won by Beggs, Geneva; Ewing, Geneva, second; Aultman, Geneva, third. Distance, 131 feet 4 inches.

Discus throw—Won by Karcis, Tech; Black, Tech, second; Ewing, Geneva, third. Distance, 131 feet 4 inches.

GRAYS SCORE PAIR OF WINS

The Homestead Grays scored a double victory over the Cuban House of David team at Forbes Field yesterday, winning the first game, 4 to 3, and the second, 9 to 3.

The matinee was a terrific battle the entire distance, and in the seventh inning the bearded players threatened to go ahead of the Grays, their threat being nipped after they had shoved two runners across the plate.

Willie Foster made his debut as a Grays' pitcher in this game and limited the visitors to six hits. Brown hurled for the Islanders. The scores:

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., May 16. — Huntington High School swamped 39 rivals for the track and field championship of West Virginia high schools here this afternoon, and won its fifth title in 14 years, scoring a total of 75½ points. Parkersburg finished second with 31 points, while Charleston was third with 21 points. Oak Hill, the defending champion, was fourth with 16½ points.

Others scored as follows: Grafton, 15 points; Morgantown, 14½ points; Triadelphia, 13 points; Wheeling, 12 points; Weirton, 11½ points; Thomas, 10 points.

Thirteen other schools scored points ranging in number from one to six.

FIVE RECORDS BROKEN

Five West Virginia scholastic records were broken and another tied during the two days of competition.

Jimmy Warfuel ran the 220-yard dash in 22 seconds flat in the qualifying round yesterday for another new record. Gwinn, of Huntington, held the former record of 22 4-10 seconds, established in 1929. Warfuel in the final of the 100-yard dash, was clocked in 9 8-10 seconds, which equals the state record set up by Fraser, of Charleston, in 1929.

RUPP HIGH SCORER

In the high jump, Slate, of Weirton, and Terry, of Oak Hill, both cleared the bar at 6 feet even, which is an inch better than the long-standing record of 5 feet 11 inches, which McMahon, of Moundsville, had made in 1923.

John Zontini, of Seth, in a try for the state javelin record, was successful, getting off a throw of 171 feet 1¼ inches, which betters the mark of 167 feet 7 inches.

The individual high scorer of the meet was Rupp, of Grafton, who had a total of 14 points, picked up in the weight events. Warfuel, of Huntington, was second with 13¾ points, with Floyd, of Huntington, third. Floyd scored 12¼ points. The summary:

BERG—Jack (Kid) Berg, of England, until recently world junior welterweight champion, who makes his local debut as the headliner of the opening outdoor show of the season in the Meyers Bowl, North Braddock, tomorrow night.

STARS — Davies and Thomas box the main bout of the first outdoor show of the year at Hickey Park, Millvale, Thursday night. Kiser, Tulsa (Okla.) lightweight, is Jack (Kid) Berg's opponent in Meyers Bowl.

Berg Makes Debut In Outdoor Opener

By HARRY KECK, Sports Editor.

The outdoor boxing season gets under way in Western Pennsylvania with three shows carded this week, at the Meyers Bowl, North Braddock, and the Castle Bowl, in New Castle, tomorrow night, and at Hickey Park, Millvale, on Thursday, and the fans are on edge expecting some real excitement.

Particular interest attaches to the debut of Jack (Kid) Berg, until recently the world junior-welterweight champion, in these parts, at the Meyers Bowl, with Ray Kiser, of Tulsa, Okla., as his opponent. Hailed as one of the greatest fighting machines of recent times, a perpetual motion miller along the lines of the late Harry Greb, Berg is one of the most popular mittmen of the day. His willingness to defend his title in fight after fight earned him a host of admirers, and the announcement that he was billed for the opening outdoor show of the season was the signal for a deluge of ticket reservations.

KISER WILLING FOE

Berg's opponent, Kiser, is favorably known here for his winning fights against Jimy Reed at the Bowl and against California Joe Gans and Eddie Brannon at the Moose Temple. He is young, tough and willing and throws a lot of gloves, and, while he does not figure to beat Berg, barring an upset of the dope, a lively battle is in prospect with two such aggressive boxers pitted against each other. Johnny Peters, of England, bantamweight stablemate of Berg, boxes Joey Ross, of New York and Cleveland, in the eight-round semi-final.

Willie Davies, of Charleroi, for a number of years the leading flyweight and bantamweight around here, and Jimmy Thomas, young Negro prospect, of the Hill, who has been coming along with a rush, headline the Hickey Park show, and another hummer is promised here. It is a chance for Thomas to establish himself as a main-bouter, while Davies will be fighting to maintain his supremacy in the local field.

Marty Gold, of Philadelphia, and Mose [illegible] southpaw bantamweight, of Oakland, meet in a return bout in the eight-round semi-final, with Butch out to atone for a technical knockout defeat suffered at the hands of Gold in a recent bout at the Moose Temple.

BOUT AT NEW CASTLE

Luis Carpentero, of Toledo, and Ross Fields, of Weirton, W. Va., bantamweights, are the main-bouters at New Castle, taking the place of a return match between Henry Firpo, of Louisville, and Sam Bruce, of Buffalo, middleweights, which had to be set back when Bruce was ordered to go through with a postponed bout with Johnny Indrisano at Boston tomorrow night.

Both the Meyers Bowl and Hickey Park have undergone improvements since last year and the promoters expect to get off to a fine start on the new season.

FEATHER TITLE BOUT

The big bout on the week's card is a featherweight championship clash of 15 rounds between Battling Battalino, the champion, and Fidel LaBarba, California challenger, in Madison Square Garden, New York, Friday night.

BUCK M'TIERNAN BOXES FREEMAN

The Buck McTiernan-Tommy Freeman bout at the Meyers Bowl, North Braddock, is back on the boards again for Monday night of next week, headlining the second show of the outdoor season there.

Arrangements for the battle had been virtually completed when McTiernan's manager, Bunny Buntach, accepted a bout for Buck with Ignacio Ara, the Spaniard, in the New York middleweight elimination tournament in Madison Square Garden, June 4, and it was announced then that the Freeman bout would have to be set back until after the New York engagement. However, Buntach yesterday decided to go through with both bouts, and signed papers for the Bowl battle.

Johnny Deutsch is back as a manager of boxers. His newest protege is Jack Kelly, reputed middleweight knockout puncher, of Girard, O.

Jack Zivic has been showing fine form in his workouts at the Pittsburgh Lyceum and is ready to get back in action again. Luke Carney is handling him and has matches in the making with Young Terry at Newark, N. J., and with Lou Brouillard in Boston.

Game Laws Unchanged

EXTRA SESSION NOT TO AFFECT PRESENT RULES

Anglers Elated Over Legislation to Eliminate Motor Boat Menace at Conneaut

Fox Hunters Protest Move To Prevent Shooting and Trapping of Reynards

By GIB MARSH

The lawmakers of Pennsylvania have about completed their work at Harrisburg, at least so far as amending or enacting new game and fish laws. Gov. Pinchot, of course, may order an extra session because of the controversy in reference to reducing the powers of the Public Service Commission, or supplanting that commission with another body of administration. However, an extra session will not include further consideration of redrafting of game and fish laws, which have already been passed on.

Gib Marsh

And when the new laws and amendments to the former clauses of the game and fish codes are scanned it is discerned that the anglers and hunters will go on the waters this summer and in the fields and woods this fall and participate in their favorite pastimes just as they have in the past. The changes which have been made will not be apparent to anglers or hunters.

For the anglers, especially those who fish at Conneaut Lake, those sportsmen are not going to be annoyed in their future sport by the menace of speeding motorboats churning up the waters on the fishing grounds, such as the bars, which extend out into the lake or along the shores. And when driving motorboats at night the pilots, under the new proposed laws, will not be permitted to drive near the fishing grounds and will be compelled to recognize the rights of and safety of anglers in boats when en route to the fishing grounds.

So if the Governor signs the laws regulating the operation of motorboats the anglers will not suffer the dread of being run down by motorboats being driven across the lake at night at high speed.

PROVIDE PROSECUTION

And the new motorboat laws include "teeth" and provide for prosecution and any fish warden, game warden or constable has jurisdiction. Not any changes have been made in reference to the opening and closing of the seasons, or limits of game fish, so the anglers of the state apparently have no complaint to lodge against the wisdom of the lawmakers during the present session.

There are hundreds of fox hunters in Pennsylvania, many who pursue and trap foxes for pelts and those who are patrons of the sport of the chase, who follow the hounds on foot and, of course, the members of the hunt clubs who follow the chase on horses. At the present session of the lawmakers a measure was introduced to prevent the shooting and trapping of foxes and consequently there were protests from the fox hunters in the northwestern section of the state and for that matter throughout the state. However, the new law is confined to Chester, Montgomery, Berks, Lancaster counties in the eastern section of the state, and Allegheny County and Westmoreland County in the western end of Pennsylvania.

Now in those counties there are organized hunt clubs, known as "Hunts" in that fraternity of sportsmen. The members of those "hunts" desire to conserve the fox for the sport obtained in the chase, and in those counties it will be unlawful to trap and shoot foxes and included in the new law are clauses which requires owners of fox hounds or clubs owning packs of hounds to purchase a special license for dogs and a special license to engage in the sport of chasing foxes. These special licenses must be purchased from the Department of Revenue at Harrisburg, the county treasurers of those counties named having no jurisdiction, and in the event of violations the fines are to be turned into the Department of Agriculture.

FOX REGARDED AS PEST

So in 61 out of the 67 counties in the Keystone state foxes may be hunted, trapped and shot as in the past. Personally, the writer is of the opinion the fox is a pest, a game killer and should be destroyed. However, there are hundreds of men and women who enjoy horses, riding to the hounds, who are responsible and spend lavishly in order to enjoy this sport of riding to the hounds. They have their prerogatives just as the patrons of the hunting and angling pastimes. They were unselfish in their requests to the lawmakers, for the members of these fox hunting clubs merely asked for protection of the fox in the counties where these fox hunting clubs are located.

For big game hunters the lawmakers tried to render a favor and likely have succeeded. If the Governor signs the amendment to the deer hunting laws, no longer will the hunters be charged an extra fee for shooting does during the special seasons declared by the game commissioners. And further the bill provides that the game commission remit the fees collected last November from the hunters who took part in the special doe shooting season of 1930.

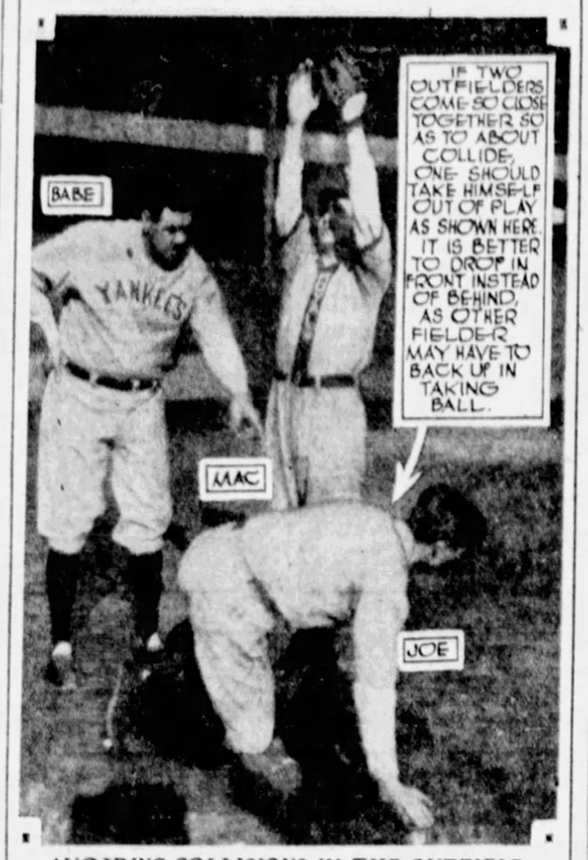
The new law provides that the game commissioners may declare special deer shooting seasons in various sections of the state where doe are considered more or less a menace to crops, orchards, etc., but no fees shall be collected or charges made for a special license. All that will be necessary for the sportsmen to obtain to shoot does will be the regular hunting license.

Just as the sportsmen and marksmen thought they had succeeded in shelving all the measures in reference to the possession of shotguns, revolvers, rifles, another measure, prohibiting ownership of firearms without special license, was introduced at Harrisburg, last week.

However, the sportsmen's associations are prepared to open hostilities against its passage.

Babe Ruth's Baseball Lessons

For High School, College and Sandlot Players.



AVOIDING COLLISIONS IN THE OUTFIELD

By BABE RUTH.

BASEBALL'S HIGHEST SALARIED PLAYER.

The advice which is contained in today's lesson will be found particularly important. It is given with the idea of helping outfielders to escape injury through collisions in the outfield. Now and then these collisions cause one player to drop the ball, and perhaps a game is lost through the misplay. But the chief thing to be considered is injury to one or both.

I don't need to tell what may happen when two fielders crash into each other while going at top speed. Sometimes it is a head injury, a brain concussion, a broken jaw or a bad cut on the head. I have seen them all. Sometimes a knee is broken, the injury which all ball players dread. It may be a collarbone, or an ankle. Almost anything can happen, and it is important that outfielders work together to prevent such things happening.

By remembering a few things you will avoid a lot of misery, and perhaps win a lot more ball games.

The ball which is hit between two outfielders belongs to the fielder who first yells that he will take it. That is the cue for the other fellow to keep out of the play. If a player yells he will take it and then fails, there is no blame to be attached to the other, even though the fielder who stops running is closer to the ball.

As you move toward a ball, keep your eye on it and keep your ear tuned up for some word which will decide whether you are to take the ball or let it alone. Once you hear another fielder shout that he has it you have one of two things to do. If close to him your one idea must be to avoid a collision. If you are far enough away to make the play safe for him, just back him up so as to be ready to help out if the ball gets away from him.

If you can get the ball shout to the other fielder you will take it. If you talk it over beforehand, you are not likely to have much trouble, provided each is willing to give way to the other. Don't be afraid to yell, and don't be backward about stopping if the other fellow keeps shouting that he will take the ball.

Now for the most important bit of advice. It concerns a play in which the two outfielders come so close together that both are about to collide. Then one should take himself out of the play, as shown in the accompanying picture. First shout to the other fielder to take the ball, then throw yourself on the ground.

It is better to throw yourself in front of the fielder who is making the catch, if this is possible. If you throw yourself behind him he may have to back up a bit after taking the ball and lose it by falling over the player on the ground. Falling away is a sure way to prevent injury to both players, and the best insurance against the ball being dropped.

You will note in the photograph that the player on the ground is entirely out of the play and in a position where he cannot interfere.

There are some outfielders who run after every ball with their mouths shut and their ears closed. They are a danger on any team. If a player refuses to give way when another outfielder yells for the ball, it is something that the manager must settle. Talk it over with the fellow who plays beside you. Make it clear that the main object of you both being out there is to see that no fly balls get away. Try to accustom yourself to the part of the field you must cover, and talk it over with the player next to you so he can do the same. Now and then a ball will be hit which belongs as much to one as to the other and then is the time when you must keep your ears open and be set to fall away, if necessary.

Decide in advance what each will yell. When you wait for a certain word you are not likely to miss it when it is spoken. Remember you can hurt your team a lot more by crashing into another player than in any other way. Don't feel that you should go rushing after every ball that you may possibly reach. The fellow playing along side you may be in better position to catch it.

The fellow who is playing beside you is entitled to the same protection from you which you expect from him.

ond horse, $3,000 to third and $1,000 to fourth.

The pari-mutuels showed that Twenty Grand paid $3.76 to a $2 win ticket, $3 for second and $2.60 to show. Not much price, to be sure, but the fame of Twenty Grand had preceded him to Kentucky, and down here they play a horse on his form. The money was literally shoved into the machines on the Greentree entry the last few minutes before the race.

SWEEP ALL SURPRISES

Surf Beard and Anchors Aweigh, stablemates of Twenty Grand, were nowhere. In fact, Anchors Aweigh broke sideways. He is a mean post actor always. The surprise of the race was the run of Sweep All, which had been given little consideration, and paid $15.58 to place.

The only thing that the late Payne Whitney left to his brother, Harry Payne Whitney, in his will was the stallion, St. Germans, and it was St. Germans that produced Twenty Grand. Payne Whitney died one of the richest men in the world. His brother, Harry Payne, was also very rich. So there wasn't anything Payne Whitney could leave his brother except as a sentimental token, and he chose St. Germans.

It was argued by those who saw the Preakness that Twenty Grand would have whipped Mate that day but for bumping from Equipoise and interference from Surf Board, his stablemate, and the argument seems to be sustained by the result today. The result was in little doubt from the moment Kurtsinger made his bid against Mate. The other horses scarcely belonged in his company.

EQUIPOISE SCRATCHED

Shortly before 2 o'clock it was announced that young Sonny Whitney's hope, Equipoise, had been scratched. They had been selling tickets in the mutuels on the Derby all morning, and there had been a brisk call for "the ugly duckling of Brookdale," but the purchasers got their money back.

Equipoise hasn't been right since his miserable showing in a race at Havre de Grace, when he seemed to be sick. The veterinarians gave his ailment some fancy name, but there is a strong impression that he was poisoned. Before that race he seemed no worse than an even money chance to win the Preakness, and then come on to a great showing in the Kentucky Derby.

So the barn that has won two Derbies in the past with Regret and Whiskery had no representative in the big race today.

The horses always seem to sense the strain. They apparently know a big race is coming up, and their demeanor varies. Some of the Derby runners today were very restless, rearing upon their hind legs and taking casual kicks at the human beings around them. Others, notably Mate and Twenty Grand, were rather quiet.

CROWD BELOW PAR

While the horses were being saddled, there was a terrific crush at the betting booths. Despite the fact that you could place a bet on the Derby at any time since morning, most of the customers seemed to have been waiting until the last minute. This in spite of the fact that for the past three days they have had the Derby for breakfast, luncheon and dinner, and certainly had ample time to make up their minds.

That the crowd today was going to be away below the usual Derby attendance was apparent early. The infield was thrown open to take care of any overflow, and, as a rule, there is a big mob over there. Today there was room to spare 'mid Col. Winn's shrubbery, bright and clean and green under a summer sun. Most of the infielders were shirt-sleeved citizens.

Vice President Charles Curtis and his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Gann, occupied a box near the finish line. Mayor Cermak, of Chicago, and a party of friends were in another box. Chicago had the biggest delegation here of any outside city.

New York wasn't as well represented as usual. The Wall Streeters were especially missing, but the Wall Streeters have an excuse to be missing anywhere just now. Bernard Gimbel, Big Town merchant prince, who hasn't muffed a Derby in years, was present.

WORKMAN OUT OF RACE

It was rumored for a time that Sonny Workman might ride Twenty Grand instead of Kurtzinger, but Sonny himself laconically remarked:

"I'm riding the rail."

Meaning that he wasn't riding at all.

Workman was to have had the mount on Equipoise. It was said that Equipoise's real trouble was finally disclosed as a quarter crack.

Jim Crofton, manager of the Agua Caliente racing plant, withdrew his colt Up from the Derby at the last minute. This was because Crofton thought a fast track is scarcely Up's dish. R. W. Collins scratched his colt Don Leon, cutting the list of starters to 12. Some of them were obviously running merely to gratify an owner's whim to see his colors in the Derby. There could be no other excuse.

Broadway Episodes

By MARK HELLINGER

Cabaret Story.

NEW YORK, May 16.

THE AGENT sat in the little restaurant off Broadway and strummed the table. According to Marc Lachman, he was in love again. But seriously this time. This was no ordinary thing with him. She was no gyp that would pass in the night. She was the real thing. No doubt about it at all. The agent was very much in love.

He found it hard to do his work. And when a Broadway agent finds it hard to work, it must be love. He shifted uneasily in his chair. If there was only something he could do for this girl. If he could find her a big job somewhere and make her a star overnight—then she might marry him. But where was he to find such a spot?

His waiter stood nearby. The little restaurant was off the beaten track and the crowds were seldom large. Only the wise Broadwayites gave it a play. So the waiters generally had plenty of time to stand about.

"Something I can get you?" asked the waiter.

The agent nodded dreamily.

"Get me an idea, Henry," he replied. "I'm in love with Mabel. Remember the girl I had in here last night? You bet you do. Beautiful, wasn't she? You bet. And just as sweet as she's beautiful.

"I'd like to make a star out of her, Henry. I know I can sell her to White or Ziegfeld—but that means a long wait. And I don't want any long waits in her case, Henry. I'm crazy about her and I'd like to marry her. She's wonderful."

The waiter brushed a fly from the pie.

"She certainly is," he answered. I could tell that by looking at her. Why don't you open a cafe for her?"

The agent smiled.

"With what?" he asked. "I'd do it in a minute if I could find a sucker with some dough. Do you know of any good suckers these days?

The waiter shrugged his shoulders.

"You'll find one," he announced. "And you'll marry that girl, too. You're a smart man, sir."

The agent handed him a dollar.

"Thank you, sir," said the waiter . . .

Mabel sat in her hotel room and spoke soft words into the telephone. It was a long distance call to Chicago. But she talked to the man as though the phone company had her on the free list.

"Honey," she murmured. "I think I'm going to make a connection any day now. I've got that agent daffy about me. It won't be long before he gets me a real job. And when he does, darling, you and your orchestra are coming to little old New York.

"I miss you so, baby. I talk to that dumb agent all day long—but all the while I'm thinking of you. Do you still love your little Mabel?"

The man in Chicago was very certain about it.

"You know I do, Mabel," he said. "I'm thinking about you a lot, too. The boys are anxious to come East in order to grab success. But I got different reasons. I want to come East because I want to be with you, my baby.

"See what you can do for us, honey. Give that dumb agent plenty of encouragement. I love you, sweetie."

Ten minutes later they hung up. In his Chicago hotel room, the orchestra leader turned to his pal, the first violinist.

"That dame's crazy about me," he asserted. "She's working harder for me than she is for herself. Got some agent on Broadway daffy about her. He'll do the right thing by her—and she'll do the right thing by us. We'll be in New York before you know it."

His pal grinned.

"You are sure a lucky guy with those dames, Hal," he stated. "How do you knock 'em off like you do?"

The leader was pleased.

"Aw," he murmured nonchalantly, "it's just a gift. They fall for me, that's all. Most women are pretty dumb anyhow."

He stopped. His face clouded.

"Gee," he said. "I hope my wife don't find out about this" . . .

Into the agent's office walked an elderly man. He handed the agent his card.

"I've been recommended to you by several people," he said. "They tell me you're the best man on Broadway to talk to."

"Certainly I am," returned the agent modestly. "What can I do for you?"

The elderly man came right to the point.

"As you can see by my card, my name is Millowitz. Arthur G. Millowitz. I've worked hard all my life and I've made quite a bit of money, if I say so myself.

"I've been going to a lot of cabarets lately. I've seen Harry Richman and Texas Guinan and Helen Morgan and a lot of others. Now I have an idea, my friend. I'd like to own a night club of my own. It will give me a little relaxation that I've always wanted. Do you think you can arrange it for me?"

The agent swallowed hard. It was one of those coincidences that can happen only on Broadway. Only last night he was dreaming of the perfect sucker. And here was his dream come true.

"Mr. Millowitz," he cried earnestly, "you're a very lucky man. Not only have I a perfect spot for a night club—but I also have the perfect star. Mabel T———. I know you haven't heard of her. But you will, sir. You most certainly will.

"She a combination of everything that's wonderful. When she sings a song, she makes Ruth Etting, Libby Holman and Helen Morgan sound like the Cherry sisters. When she dances, you forget that Marilyn Miller ever lived. Ah, Mr. Millowitz, she's the last word."

So they talked. On and on. And when Mr. Millowitz left the agent's office, the deal was set. The agent rubbed his hands and called a producer of night club revues.

"I landed a swell sucker," he announced proudly. "You're in on the deal. We open a new cabaret in two weeks. Get busy on some material right away. I'll send some people over to your office right away."

"Okay with me," said the night club producer. He hung up the phone. "So he's landed another sucker," he murmured to himself. "I wonder how I'll be able to steal him away?"

The agent phoned Mabel.

"It's all set," he asserted proudly. "You're going to be starred in a new night club. I just closed the deal for you. Isn't that swell?"

"Great," returned Mabel. "But don't forget what I told you. You wire Hal in Chicago and have him come on with his orchestra. They'll be a sensation here. They'll—"

The agent was dubious.

"I'm not so sure," he muttered. "I've heard he isn't so hot. They tell me—"

It was Mabel's turn to interrupt.

"I want Hal's orchestra," was all she said.

"All right, all right," cried the agent hastily. "Anything you want, you can have. As long as you love me. Do you love me?"

"Oh, sure," she said. "Sure I love you." . . .

A few minutes later she was talking to Chicago.

"You're coming on to New York, Hal," she enthused. "Everything is set. Oh, I'm so happy. Do you love me, darling?"

"Oh, sure," said the orchestra cader. "Sure I love you." . . .

In two weeks the night club opened. It was a typical gathering. Wine was sold. Everybody bought. Whoopee. Hooray. The place was crowded to capacity. Waiters fell over each other. The cash register sang merrily.

Hal stood in front of his orchestra and smiled happily. He leaned toward his first violinist.

"We packed 'em in all right," he chirped. "Guess I'm a real draw."

The following night found only one-quarter of the previous crowd. The chorus no longer danced as they did before. Mabel sang but two songs. No outsiders entertained. Only two quarts of wine were sold. The cash register no longer sang.

The third night found 40 people in the cafe. The fourth night found 20. The waiters agreed that something was wrong.

"It's just like I said," said one. "That broad ain't no good."

"Aw," said another, "she's all right. It's that orchestra what's drivin' people out."

At a corner table, the producer sat with Mr. Millowitz.

"If you'll back my wife in a new night club," he was saying, "I know it can't flop. That agent hasn't any real ideas of talent. Now if you'd put the whole thing in my hands—"

Mabel came along and dropped wearily into a chair. The producer excused himself and left. Mr. Millowitz talked slowly and softly.

"I'm not a young man," he asserted, "but I think I can make you very happy. I have more than enough money to take care of us both. I love you and I want you to be my wife."

The entertainer bit her lip. She arose.

"I'll be back in a minute," she said.

She walked to the rear of the club and walked into the orchestra's private room. The leader was playing solitaire. He looked up.

"I'm going back to Chicago on Saturday," he cried. "You got me into this mess. By rights I should punch you right in the nose. This New York is the rottenest town on earth."

"I thought you loved me, Hal," muttered the girl.

The leader placed the two of spades on the ace of hearts. He even cheated at solitaire.

"Aw, cut it," was his distinguished reply. "I guess my wife is good enough for me. Get out of here and leave me alone."

Mabel went back to Mr. Millowitz.

"I'll marry you," she murmured.

"I'm glad," said Mr. Millowitz. . . .

In the little restaurant just off Broadway the agent strummed the table. He talked. The waiter listened attentively.

"What suckers people are," he announced. "Imagine Mabel marrying that old geezer. And imagine the trouble he's going to have with her.

"Meanwhile the club's closed up tight. That sap orchestra leader has gone back to Chicago. What a sucker he was to leave there in the first place!"

"Did you get anything out of the deal?" asked the waiter.

"Not a nickel, Henry," was the reply. "They even sent me a bill for the sandwiches I ate. But something happened to me in that club that money can't buy. I fell in love, Henry. I fell in love.

"Yes, sir. Just one of the kids in the revue. But she's beautiful, Henry. Very beautiful. And just as sweet as she's beautiful.

"I'd like to get somebody to back her in a vaudeville act. I'm crazy about this kid, Henry. I'd like to marry her. This is the real thing."

The waiter shrugged his shoulders.

"You'll find somebody to back her, sir," he announced. "And you'll marry her, too. You're no sucker like the rest. You're a smart man."

The agent handed him a dollar.

"Thank you, sir," said the waiter. . . .

FINANCIAL Local Securities MARKETS

LOCAL STOCKS DRIFT AS N. Y. LIST RECEDES

Trading Volume Shrinks On Narrow Price Swing; Lone Star Gas Rallies.

With a sharp contraction in the volume of business for the week securities on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange sought lower ground in some instances, but in the general market the showing for the period was satisfactory in view of the nervousness occasioned by the decline of United States Steel common on the "big board."

Offerings of Lone Star Gas were considerably under the previous week, amounting to 9,400 shares against over 22,000. The decline, which had been in progress for some time as a result of the Fort Worth city gas controversy, apparently ended during the week with reports that Lone Star had purchased the Fort Worth Gas Company and would operate it as part of the Lone Star system. The news strengthened Lone Star stock, which closed with a large fractional net gain for the week.

HACHMEISTER STRONG

One of the strong features of the week was Hachmeister-Lind which moved up steadily on buying induced by reports of favorable acceptance of its new automobile light. The preferred stock was benefited also and moved to new high ground with the common. On the other hand some of the better grade industrials in the list here sold at new bottoms for the bear market, among them Harbison-Walker, Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Blaw Knox. Declines in these issues were not wide but were sufficient to break the previous lows. There was no particular news bearing on the individual issues and their weakness was attributed to the generally unsettled conditions in all markets.

STREET NERVES UNSTRUNG

The deliberate character of the selling in Steel common and American Can the latter half of the week and the inclusion of National Biscuit in the "weak" list yesterday unnerved the Street as much as anything since the first crash of the market almost two years ago. Why they were singled out for attack and why support failed to stem the declines were questions heard on every hand. Of course, low operations and impaired earnings tell part of the story, but the Street, in its present "touchy" state, saw something more ominous on the tape and waited expectantly for some piece of "bad news." It failed to come, however, and traders went home yesterday as much mystified as they were Wednesday night when Steel common cracked in the last half hour and closed at a new low.

PRICE INDEX HOLDS STEADY

AUBURNDALE, Mass., May 16.—(AP.)—Following several weeks of sharply declining commodity prices, the average during the past week remained steady, showing only a fractional decline from the week ending May 8, says the McGill Commodity Service. The downward movement was sufficient, however, to establish the level of all commodities at a new low point.

How soon commodity prices will begin to stabilize depends entirely upon the degree of recovery in industrial activity. While the total business volume remains above the low point established three and four months ago, the extent of the upward movement has proven limited.

The most important price changes for the week follow:

COAL REMAINS IN STATE OF SEVERE SLUMP

Low Prices and Reduced Demand Keeps Bituminous Mines Working at Loss.

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

Low prices and reduced consumption still hold the coal industry in the grip of a depression even more severe than that affecting general industry.

Bituminous coal producers in the Pittsburgh district have suffered from excessive competition for the past six years. Most of the leading producers have failed to show a profit during this period. The general business slump has made conditions facing the coal trade even more acute than they were two years ago.

Some operators in the Pittsburgh district see the possibility of a moderate revival due to the present low state of coal stocks and the spread of labor troubles in the West Virginia fields. Others fail to derive much hope from this direction. The more pessimistic group states that stocks are off in tonnage but declares that they are not particularly low in proportion to consumption. This group sees little chance for a shortage to develop due to labor troubles unless strikes occur on a much wider scale.

MARKETS LOST

The coal industry's problems are steadily becoming more difficult to solve as a result of the increased portion of their markets being lost to competitive fuels. Cheap fuel oil is making steady inroads on coal consumption. The rapid development in the use of natural gas is increasing the importance of another type of competition. Added to this is the fact that both railroad and industrial users are increasing the efficiency of the coal burning equipment.

At present steam slack sells for about 75 to 80 cents a ton at mines in this district. This is slightly above the low levels for the current depression, but offers no profits for most operators. Lump sells for about $1.20 to $1.40 a ton.

The extent of the depression in demand for coal is seen by the fact that production in the week ended April 25, 1931, was 6,314,000 tons. This compared with 8,191,000 tons in the corresponding week of 1930 and with 9,285,000 tons in 1929. In April, 1923, weekly production averaged 10,836,000 tons.

PRODUCTION OFF

The slump in Pennsylvania output has been even more pronounced. For the week the production in this state was 1,830,000 tons, compared with 2,342,000 in 1930 and with 2,737,000 in 1929. The wekly output in April, 1923, was 3,531,000.

In spite of this sharp curtailment in output, total stocks of bituminous coal on April 1 amounted to only 29,500,000 tons, compared with 33,100,000 tons a year ago and 48,300,000 tons two years ago.

The constant pressure of low prices has forced operators to make a long series of wage cuts. The lowest levels have been reached in West Virginia, where some producers are paying less than $2 a day. Under the Jacksonville wage agreement, which expired on April 1, 1927, day laborers at mines were paid $7.50 a day. Loaders are being paid from 15 to 20 cents a ton, against about 65 cents under former union conditions. Pittsburgh district wages vary widely, but are considerably higher than in West Virginia.

The forcing of wages below a level which will support existence has resulted in sporadic strikes throughout the West Virginia fields. At present 18 mines, employing over 6,000 men, are closed by strikes.

Mexican Problem Puzzles Experts

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Officials here were puzzled as to how Mexico would obtain gold to carry out the plan of bankers in that country to stabilize and bring back to par the peso.

Financial experts at the Treasury declined to discuss the problem without knowing more of the plan, but said that the only manner in which Mexico could obtain gold, as far as they knew, was to borrow it. They said the National City Bank had made a gold loan to Mexican interests about six months ago to bolster up the declining value of the peso. They did not believe, however, that Mexican interests would wish to borrow again.

GRAIN PRICES TAKE TUMBLE

CHICAGO, May 16.—Swamped by general selling, wheat today tumbled to the lowest price this month. Corn outdid the season's bottom level. Stock market weakness, drought relief in Canada and prospects of a bumper wheat crop in the United States were main incentives for sellers. Wheat closed irregular, 1¾ cents lower to ⅛ advance, corn ¾-1⅛ down, oats ⅜-½ off, and provisions unchanged to a setback of 15 cents.

1,300,000 Steady Jobs In Building Industry During Present Year

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Latest official reports indicate building throughout the country is holding up extremely well in the face of adverse factors. Recent estimates reveal the industry will spend something like $6,500,000,000 this year, a decided improvement over both last year and the year previous, but still under 1928.

All branches except non-residential structure, the field already over-built, are expected to show an increase for the year.

One building concern has translated this amount to be spent into terms of employment to indicate 2,000,000 men will have work at the peak, with 1,300,000 having jobs for an entire year. Translating further, every $5,000 spent in construction will keep one workman busy an entire year, which is the most important significance of the expenditures.

STOCKS AGAIN SELL OFF TO LOWER LEVELS

Industrial Shares Close Near 1926 Prices — Can And Steel Lose Ground.

By BROADAN WALL
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The stock market again today sold lower, under a volume of less than a million shares. The net declines were not as large as on previous days of the past week, but there was the same noticeable lack of support in many of the pivotal stocks. Industrials as a group finally broke under all previous low average prices of the bear market, and closed at the lowest levels prevailing since June, 1926.

Railroads continued their slump and have penetrated the price levels of 1923. Utilities were least affected during the short morning session, but they are near their former lowest average level of 1931.

Interest naturally centered on the performances of the same group of prominent issues which have been most affected by selling during the earlier sessions of the week, American Can, United States Steel and similar stocks.

CAN NEAR 100

American Can was forced down to within the smallest trading fraction of 100, the lowest price since the absolute 1929 panic low of 86. The stock at 100 would yield 5 per cent, including the $1 extra which has been paid in addition to the regular $4 disbursement. An aggressive bear clique undoubtedly is responsible for a portion of the pressure against the stock, but they seemingly have been aided by indisposition on the part of Can's usual sponsors to support the stock.

Steel closed down 1⅝ points, but its low for the day failed to penetrate the lowest level reached Friday at 101⅜.

FEW RESIST

Few stocks opposed the downward trend. Montgomery Ward and Sears Roebuck were among the exclusive group. The former has performed in most encouraging fashion.

General Motors was another issue to hold firm. Allied Chemical closed down a slight fraction. National Biscuit sold down to a new low at 67, where the yield on its $2.80 dividend is slightly above 4 per cent.

The market was highly professional and reflected in large part the usual week-end adjustments.

Razor Firm Starts Chain Store Suit

NEW YORK, May 16.—Attorneys for the Gillette Safety Razor Company announced today they had started suit against the United Cigar Stores Company of America for $10,000,000.

The action, they said, was based on alleged misrepresentation by United in connection with a contract to market Gillette razors and blades. Gillette alleges that by misrepresenting the number of blades sold by its stores at retail during the year previous to the 10-year contract, United led Gillette to believe its retail output was larger than it was in fact.

Attorneys Answer Unfairness Charge

CLEVELAND, May 16.—Attorneys of Continental Shares, Inc., filed answers today denying charges of four stockholders that certain stock transactions involving approximately $45,000,000 between Continental and companies allied with Cyrus S. Eaton had been unfair to Continental.

The suits were filed several weeks ago by Attorney Charles S. Wachner, a Continental stockholder, and by the Paramount Coal and Coke Company. Today's answers defended the deals as fair and reasonable.

Dullness Prevails In Equipment Mart

NEW YORK, May 16.—Continued improvement in the eastern district furnished the one bright spot in an otherwise dull week of business in the country's electrical equipment markets, Electrical World reports. Central-station demand in the East is growing more active with the advent of spring and inquiries look promising from that quarter. Industrial business also shows better strength and the call for motors, controls and accessory apparatus is stronger than at any time for several weeks.

Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad during the first 14 days of May handled 59,795 revenue cars, against 57,207 in the like period in April and 72,768 cars in the like period in 1930.

Eaton Director in Cleveland Firm

CLEVELAND, May 16.—Although Cyrus S. Eaton has resigned as chairman of the board of Commonwealth Securities, Inc., he still retains his directorship, representing his own holdings in the company.

Dry Goods Market.

NEW YORK, May 16.—Cotton goods were quiet today with a firmer trend toward the close in print cloth and sheetings markets. Wash goods prices were easier. Some purchases of raw silk have been made in bulk for late control shipment. Silk goods were moving more freely at lower prices. Burlaps were easy.

MIXUPS RESULT FROM RUSHES IN BUSINESSES

Desire of Crowd to Get Aboard Paying Venture Often Causes Swamping.

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, May 16.—A very human tendency to overdo profitable activities lies behind many of the economic tangles which bring depression.

If unanalytical business men see others making a profit in certain directions, they decide that they, too, should get aboard. Finally, this imitative impulse leads to industrial over-equipment, and proves harmful to profits.

Mr. Rukeyser

In an elementary way, the tendency was exemplified last year in the building of Tom Thumb golf courses all over the land. It is said that the last man to open one up in Los Angeles found that he was too late. Accordingly, he closed it up, putting up a sign to the effect, "Opened by mistake."

FIELD TOO CROWDED

At present the oil industry, a sore spot on the economic scene, is suffering from similar human excesses. As Walter Teagle, president of the Standard Oil Company (New Jersey), has pointed out in his annual report, "over the past 10 years the industry has attracted capital in excess of its actual requirements, resulting in an over-expansion of all its facilities."

HARMFUL CREDIT

Politicians have long depicted the sad lot of those who lack easy access to credit and capital. But they have been silent about the equally insidious hazard of glutting farming and industry with too much credit and too much capital.

When an industry gets out of balance, it must come to a halt for a time until national growth catches up with its oversized financial and industrial clothing, which have been provided.

If industrial executives were all-wise in time of bounteous prosperity, they would discourage excessive competition by a policy of moderation and forbearance in respect to profits.

They would pass along most of the economies of improved production methods to consumers, leaving little incentive to outsiders to come in and disturb the equilibrium of an industry.

Wheat Plan Success Rests With Russia

LONDON, May 16.—Authorities on world wheat problems, surveying the prospects of the international wheat conference, which opens here May 19, were agreed that Russian participation in any agreement that might be reached was vitally necessary for the success of that gathering, designed to invigorate the ailing wheat markets of the world.

Representatives of 11 wheat-exporting countries in four continents were here or en route. Market experts refuse to express an opinion on the chances of an agreement resulting from the session.

Big Support Pool Formed in Canada

NEW YORK, May 16.—Dow, Jones & Co. says that a powerful pool has been formed by Canadian interests "to support stocks selling currently at what they believe to be ridiculously low levels in many cases." Some buying already has taken place under the plan."

The pool will support stocks of Canadian companies exclusively and Canadian stocks having markets in other countries will be supported.

AUTOMOBILE NEWS

LINCOLN AUTO DISPLAY OPENS HERE MONDAY

Luxurious Models Will Be Shown in Hotel Schenley; Manufacturers Coming.

For four days beginning tomorrow an elaborate salon of new Lincoln automobiles will be presented in the showroom of Hotel Schenley. The display is in direct charge of factory representatives and is made up entirely of special custom built bodies. Several prominent builders of fine motor cars and bodies will be here for the display.

This display of the new Lincoln in body types that express the art of the country's leading custom-coach designers will appeal to all who are interested in a motor car as nearly perfect as it is possible to produce.

LUXURIOUS MODELS

Luxurious convertible and closed models, the longer, lower chassis, the highly refined, more powerful engine, the new Lincoln free-wheeling transmission, new braking system—such are the outstanding features of this exhibit, which demonstrate the desirability of this distinguished motor car.

Included also is an interesting display of parts and the famous precision methods that have long been associated with Lincoln manufacture.

There is a body "in white" to illustrate the substantial structural features. There also will be an exhibit of the marvelous Johansson gage blocks, accurate to four millionths of an inch, which control the precise measurements required in the construction of a Lincoln. These blocks are manufactured by a division of the Ford Motor Company.

CUSTOM BODIES

In addition to the standard limousine and five passenger coupe, the following custom bodies will be on display: A Brunn brougham, a Deham phaeton, a Dietrich convertible sedan, a two passenger Judkin's coupe, a Willoughby limousine, a three-window Berlin, by Judkin; a club roadster, by LeBaron; a four passenger two-window town sedan, and a four passenger pheaton with tonneau cowl and windshield.

The exhibit, which is under the auspices of the Linford Motor Company, Lincoln distributor here, will be open daily from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. until Thursday.

DODGE SALES ON INCREASE

DETROIT, May 16.—The week ending April 25 showed an increase of 6.1 per cent in retail deliveries of new Dodge Sixes and Eights as compared to the preceding week, while the first three weeks of April produced an increase of 48.4 per cent over the same period of March, according to a statement from the factory to J. J. Kilroy, president and general manager for F. D. Saupp, Inc.

Retail deliveries of both passenger cars and trucks in the United States also showed substantial increases. For the week ending April 25 the increase was 6.9 per cent and for the three weeks' period, 28.8 per cent.

GENERAL TIRE 61ST DIVIDEND

It is no longer news for the General Tire and Rubber Company to declare a dividend on its common stock, but in these years it is something for a company to pay its sixty-first consecutive dividend, and that's what General has just done, comments Jim Campbell, General Tire distributor here.

General Tire plants are now running at 91 per cent of capacity. The company has been able to level off productions so that the wages paid last year were only 9 per cent less than they were the year before.

PONTIAC DERBY CONTEST ENDS; AWARDS MADE

Four Salesmen Win Free Trip to Michigan Factory; Cash Prize Also Given.

C. A. Rehtmeyer, Pittsburgh distributor, and J. S. Calhoun, Pittsburgh zone manager for Oakland-Pontiac, have announced the winners in the "National Drive Them Campaign Brown and Black Derby Contest." W. Coyle Cochrane, Herbert Wentz, C. H. Packer and George Finch, all retail salesmen of the C. A. Rehtmeyer, Inc., won a trip to the factory at Pontiac and the General Motors' proving grounds, with all expenses paid by C. A. Rehtmeyer.

Mr. Wentz also won an additional prize of $50, which was awarded by Mr. Calhoun to the man making the greatest number of retail sales in the entire Pittsburgh zone. Mr. Calhoun, himself, was the winner of a black derby hat as a prize because his zone won over the Buffalo zone, matched against Pittsburgh in this contest.

The brown and black derby feature caused considerable good-natured rivalry and was productive of many sales.

Pontiac is now in third place for the year in the entire Pittsburgh zone and shows a 15 per cent gain in registration over the same period last year, which, in the face of general conditions, is an enviable record.

Both Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Rehtmeyer are greatly pleased over the results achieved. The winners start their trip to the factory tonight and will be gone for several days.

RAPID GROWTH IN NASH SALES

The demand for new Nash cars increased more than 105 per cent from April 1 to April 30 this year, states a factory announcement received by George Gray, president of Nash-Pittsburgh Company.

This percentage of increase is based on the growth of orders for April delivery from the first to the last of the month.

Packard-Deisel Powered Plane Seeks Air Record

Arrangements have been nearly completed by Walter E. Lees and Frederic A. Brossy, at Jacksonville, Fla., for another attempt to break the world's non-refueling airplane endurance record with the "Packard-Bellanca," a Bellanca Pacemaker plane with a 55-foot wing spread, powered with a Packard-Diesel aircraft engine. The actual start is expected to be made some time next week.

TIRE COMPANY BRANCH MOVED

Frank Foley, Pittsburgh branch manager of the Kelly Springfield Tire Company, has announced the removal of the Pittsburgh branch to a new and larger warehouse at Center and Morewood avenues.

Mr. Foley stated that the increased demand for Kelly tires necessitated this move, which places the branch in a more central location, enabling it to better serve dealers.

ELKS GOOD WILL CROSS-COUNTRY AUTO DUE HERE

Convention Courier to Be Guest of Studebaker And Allegheny Lodge.

Final plans have been completed for the reception tomorrow of one of the three cars of the Elks' purple and white fleet, which are on a nation-wide good will tour, being made in advance of the sixty-eighth annual Elks' grand lodge convention in Seattle, Wash., this summer.

Scheduled to arrive promptly at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, the gleaming purple and white free wheeling Studebaker President Eight roadster will be met by a caravan of Studebaker cars and escorted to Studebaker salesroom on Baum boulevard. A luncheon has been arranged at Allegheny Lodge, No. 339, B. P. O. Elks.

An interesting feature of the reception tomorrow will be an official check of the eceonomy of free wheeling. The finding will be certified by the local A. A. A. representative.

The pilots carry a personal message of good will from Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, to more than 200 Elks clubs.

Of course ..... you can get along without Twin Ignition

...but you don't get along so well

You could, if necessary, see with one eye. You can drive with one hand. Two make a better job of it.

The same applies to Twin Ignition. People who drive the Nash Twin Ignition Eight-80 or Eight-90 (16 spark plugs, 16 firing points, instead of 8) have a distinct advantage over cars still using single ignition. The gasoline mixture is burned more quickly and more completely.

By engineering test, the same motor with Twin Ignition instead of single ignition, produces 22% more power, 5 more miles per hour top speed and 2 extra miles of travel from a gallon of gasoline.

Of course, you can get along without Twin Ignition. But we say, and these cars will prove it, that you don't get along so well!

Just compare the pep, power, smoothness and gasoline consumption of the Nash Eight-80 or Eight-90 with cars of the single ignition type at the same price, and you'll agree with us, and with Nash owners, that here is a most desirable improvement.

Buy no car today until you have made this interesting comparison. We will gladly arrange for a demonstration. Just phone—we'll send a car.

CHRYSLER ADDS 5 NEW MODELS TO 'EIGHT' LINE

De Luxe Cars Equipped With Latest Improvements; Engine Develops 95 H. P.

Five new de luxe additions to the Chrysler Straight Eight line were introduced here yesterday by the Samson Motor Company, Chrysler distributor for the Pittsburgh territory.

Patterned after the Chrysler Imperial Eight in appearance, and with distinctive interior appointments, these de luxe models are designed for those who enjoy luxurious travel and want a motor car that is distinctly and favorably different from other cars.

Many of the distinctive features of the Chrysler Imperial Eight are found in the Chrysler Eight de luxe.

SYMBOL OF SPEED

Double windshield with chrome-plated frames so eminently in favor are a prominent feature of these Chrysler Eight de luxe models. The radiator cap modeled after the gazelle, swiftest of all animals—adds further distinction to the car's pointed radiator.

The de luxe models are offered in a series of engaging color combinations, with unusually beautiful harmonizing effects.

Unusual care has been taken to make the interior fitments of the new de luxe models sumptuously spaced, upholstered, trimmed and fixtured.

The front seat is low. It is solidly and permanently anchored to the center pillars of the body. The back of the driver's seat is adjustable over a range of 3¼ inches.

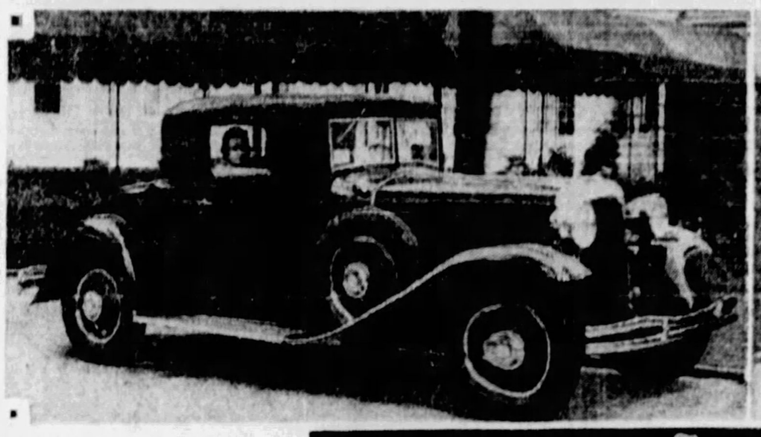
95 HORSEPOWER

The engine of the Chrysler Eight De Luxe incorporates the finest of Chrysler features. It develops 95 horsepower at 3,400 revolutions per minute and is capable of 80 miles per hour. The engine is mounted on rubber at five points and completely insulated from the frame.

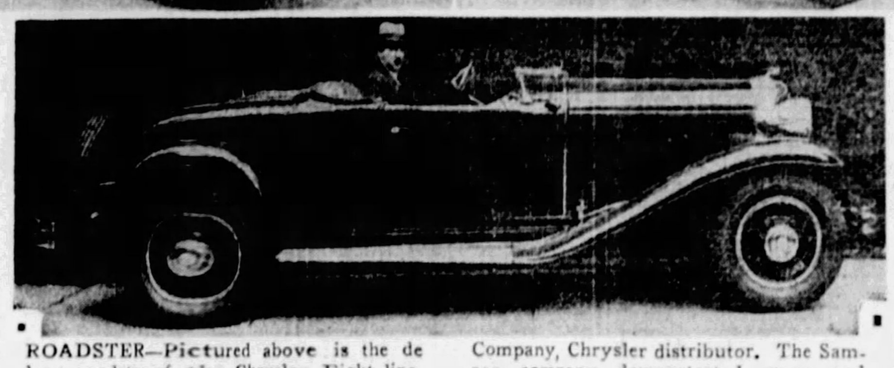
The carburetor is of the latest down-draft type with a fuel pump. The carburetor is equipped with an acceleration pump to furnish fuel instantly for sudden acceleration.

De Luxe models have the Chrysler multi-range four-speed transmission with dual-high gears. There are two high gears instead of one—a high gear for city driving and another for the open road. Both gears are of a patented internal-mesh design, permitting the driver to change instantly from either high to the other at any car speed without clashing.

CHRYSLER ADDS TO LINE OF EIGHTS—TESTED ON HILLS



COUPE—The new de luxe coupe addition to the Chrysler Eight line. It is patterned after the Imperial Eight in appearance, with ample power and speed for all highway conditions.



ROADSTER—Pictured above is the de luxe roadster of the Chrysler Eight line. The new Chrysler additions are being presented here through the Samson Motor Company, Chrysler distributor. The Samson company demonstrated power and speed of the new models on nationally famous Pittsburgh grades last week.

SEDAN — This Chrysler Eight de luxe sedan carrying two turned right off Fifth avenue at 10 miles an hour in first high gear and topped South Negley avenue at 23 miles an hour.

TESTING URGED BY GOODRICH

A timely warning has been given by J. B. Roberts, general manager for Goodrich Silvertown, Inc., super-service stations, that the condition of the family automobile plays a most important part when making a trip by motor.

Before starting on such a trip, the car should be thoroughly greased and the tires and tubes particularly should be carefully examined by an expert. The tire specialist removes the casing and inspects it for inside and outside bruises. Many tires are just on the verge of being worn out and perhaps under the strain of hard driving will blow out, sometimes with disastrous results.

A few of the other important items to consider are the battery, fan belt, radiator connections, windshield wiper blades and wire insulation, things in which Goodrich super-service stations specialize.

Willys Six Wins Mountain Race

Pitted against a field comprised mostly of eight-cylinder cars, two standard low priced Willys sixes raced to first and second places in the annual thrilling mountain race from Mexico City to Puebla. The winning Willys six covered the course of 75.8 miles in 75 minutes.

DEVAUX FIRM WIDENS SCOPE

Robert Mulch, general sales manager of the DeVaux-Hall Motors Corporation, was a guest of H. D. Shawkey, president of the DeVaux-Pittsburgh Company, last week, and was much interested in the progress being made by Mr. Shawkey's company here.

Mr. Mulch was so impressed with the efficient representation that their new car is receiving that he extended the local distributor's territory east in Pennsylvania to Chambersburg. He also gave Mr. Shawkey's company a portion of the states of Maryland and West Virginia. The new counties in Pennsylvania include Warren, Cameron, Clearfield, Center, Huntingdon and Franklin, also Garrett and Allegany counties in Maryland, and Mineral, Grant, Hardy and Hampshire counties in West Virginia.

Dealer Finds 'Prosperity Six' Demand Great

The new Prosperity Six, which marks the Grahams' entry into the field of popular priced cars selling at less than $800, has met with immediate acceptance by the motoring public in this city, declares E. S. Carpenter, Graham distributor here.

Since the new model was put on view it has been the object of more interest and enthusiasm than have ever, in Mr. Carpenter's experience, marked the introduction of a new model.

According to factory reports the demand for the new cars on the part of distributors and dealers everywhere has exceeded the supply.

De Soto Appoints Cleveland Manager

DETROIT, May 16.—The appointment of Walter E. Dunkin as manager of the Cleveland district for De Soto Motor Corporation is announced today by L. G. Peed, general sales manager.

FREE WHEELING OPTION GIVEN

Free wheeling, with positive gear control, now is optional at slight additional cost on the new Marmon Big Eight, according to an announcement just made by Harry Blumenthal, general manager of Marmon Pittsburgh Company.

The announcement of optional free wheeling on the Big Eight follows closely a like announcement of the Marmon Eight in the $1,000 field. Immediately after the Marmon Eight announcement sales of this model showed an immediate upturn which resulted in a new high record being set for the year.

SHIP-TO-SHORE RADIO PROGRAM

NEW YORK, May 16.—The first ship-to-shore radio broadcast ever attempted from mid-ocean will take place next Wednesday evening at 7:45 o'clock, eastern daylight time, from the home-bound S. S. Leviathan, of the United States Lines when that ship is 1,000 miles from Sandy Hook.

A ship-to-shore wireless telephone will carry the voice of Robert L. (Believe It or Not) Ripley to New York, where it will be broadcast over a regular radio hook-up of nine stations, covering the Atlantic seaboard, from Maine to Georgia. This will inaugurate a new twice-a-week radio program sponsored by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, to be known as the Believe It or Not Esso entertainment.

Ripley plans to reveal in his mid-ocean talk some of the latest incredibilities unearthed during a two-month trip, from which he is just returning. The second program is scheduled to go on the air Friday at 7:45 p. m., eastern daylight time, the same night as the ship docks.

NEW AUBURN CAR FEATURES RIGID CHASSIS

Undue Riding Discomfort In Most Instances Held Due to Sag in Frame.

Motorists who have experienced undue riding discomfitures on rough roads, and other annoyances should know that in most instances these are the result of lack of chassis frame rigidity, according to J. A. O'Malley, Auburn distributor here. The chassis frame of an automobile acts as a foundation for the entire car.

The chassis frame of the conventional automobile is made up of two side rails, ranging in depth from 5½ to 8 inches in the center and in thickness from 3-32 to 5-32, according to the engineering of the car. Over the front and rear axles these side rails are reduced in depth to allow for clearance. The two rails are joined together by cross members.

In addition to the thickness of the steel used in the rails and cross members, much of the rigidity of this chassis frame is due to the manner in which these cross members are attached.

Auburn engineers, after years of experimentation, have found that the conventional bracing with cross members is insufficient to make a chassis frame absolutely rigid. In tests it was found that even though six cross members were used in the conventional manner, if any one end of the frame was lifted the frame would sag. Benefiting from the experience of the Cord front drive car, which first introduced the X-cross member, a bridge-like construction, Auburn engineers devised a similar type for the 1931 Auburn. This X-member provides three-way bracing.

Battery Testing In Spring Urged

With the coming of warm weather it is wise to have the car battery checked at more frequent intervals, Oldsmobile service men advise. The water in the battery evaporates faster in the summer than in the winter and unless replenished frequently the battery is in danger.

HUDSON-ESSEX NOW OFFERING FREE WHEELING

Optional Equipment With Both Cars: Six Lowest Priced Car So Designed.

Selective free wheeling on all Hudson and Essex models is now available as optional equipment, according to William J. McAneeny, president and general manager of the Hudson Motor Car Company. The adoption of free wheeling by Hudson makes Essex the lowest priced car offering this new, but now established, feature, with Hudson maintaining its position as the lowest priced eight.

While all of the basic principles of free wheeling as used in the costliest cars are retained, Hudson engineers have included several engineering advancements and it is to these that the term "selective" has been applied. The driver is able to enjoy the fullest advantage of free wheeling or operate his car as a standard vehicle, whichever he desires, by simply touching a small lever.

This lever, which is placed conveniently at the driver's right hand, when moved backward puts the car "into" free wheeling for all three forward speeds, the driver merely continuing to drive as in a conventional car. He is, however, also able to "free wheel" at will, returning to any gear without any thought of touching the lever.

The Hudson and Essex interlocking gear device, long popular in the models, has been retained, greatly enhancing the benefits of free wheeling by the additional safety it provides.

Buick Deliveries Show Trade Gain

The month to month gain from January to April in the retail deliveries of Buick cars indicates a substantial improvement in the automobile buying market, according to C. W. Churchill, general sales manager of the Buick Motor Company. During the month of April 13,108 new Buicks were delivered, which was a gain of 32 per cent over March, when deliveries reached 9,959.

January deliveries of Buicks were 5,616 units and February 6,409. This gives a total of 35,092 cars from January 1 to April 30.

Now All Can Have

SELECTIVE

FREE WHEELING

The luxurious floating ride — heretofore exclusive in some of the costliest, most pretentious cars—is now available to all.

Because it is selective you free wheel when and as you desire. You drive, without confusion, as you have always done. There is nothing new to learn. You free wheel in either first, second or third speeds.

Rain Plays Havoc With Sandlot Baseball Card

RELIANCE NINE STANDS OUT IN LOCAL CIRCUIT

George Miller's Team Scores Victories Over Turtle Creek and Linwood Club.

Jack Fertig Appears to Have Championship Contender In Homestead Aces.

By TOM BIRKS

After enjoying ideal weather at the outset, sandlotters in Western Pennsylvania are being retarded in their activities by rain and more rain and as a result leagues schedules were messed up considerably during the past week when many contests were postponed because of the elements.

What few contests that were played turned out to be sloppy affairs, although Reliance Life, North Side Buicks and the Homestead Aces turned in some fine contests.

George Miller's insurance boys won both of their games in the West Penn League, swamping Turtle Creek Community at the Homewood playgrounds and followed with another fine victory over the Linwood club. The fine showing of Soapy Heyl on the mound has been one of the features of Reliance's excellent showing this season. Heyl looked great in the battle with Turtle Creek Community, and if he continues the same pace he should enjoy one of his best seasons. Spencer and Gormley also are turning in some nice games.

BUICKS SIGN DUBUQUE

The stock of the North Side Buicks has been boosted considerably by the signing of Armand Dubuque. The former Piedmont Leaguer, signed by Manager Johnny Dunsky, showed plenty of stuff against the Thomas nine, holding the Bloomfielders well in check.

The Thomas club scored a fine victory over Book Shoe in the City League, coming through in the final inning to grab the decision. Weak pitching seems to be the big drawback to Book Shoe this year, the City Leaguers, it seems, not being able to hold a lead due to poor mound work.

Homewood started off on the right foot in the City League Friday when Bimmy Steele hurled the Dalymen to a great victory over the Thomas club. Lefty Hill, as usual, started for Thomas, but could not stand the pace, Sammy Leon replacing him on the mound.

Manager Jack Fertig, of the Homestead Aces, apparently has developed another championship aggregation. Forced to rebuild his team as the result of wholesale releases handed out to members of last year's team, Fertig is making quite a success of the job, if early games can be taken as a criterion.

THREE VICTORIES

The Homestead Aces have scored three impressive victories, defeating Turtle Creek, Swissvale and Linwood in the order named.

Despite the poor weather of the past week, interest in sandlot activities in Westmoreland County, Monongahela Valley and Washington County is high, and large crowds are turning out for the league contests.

According to well-founded reports, the West Penn League will be enlarged to an eight-club circuit with the addition of the Martin Griffin club. Davey Roberts, former manager of the James F. Malone club, may be signed to assist Marty Griffin and Gerry Americus in handling this outfit.

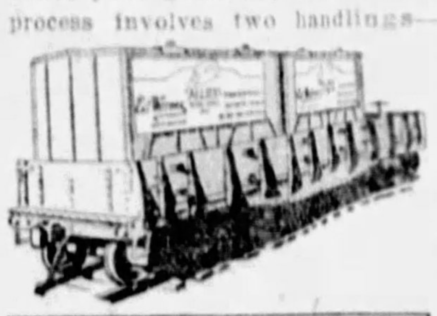
A NEW IDEA...
In Long-Distance Moving!
That Will Save You Money!
SAFE, FAST, ECONOMICAL

A flat bed truck brings the "Storinvan" to your door. There, your goods are securely packed and padded in for shipment. The container is then hauled to the railroad where it is lifted to a flat car and hauled to the point nearest your destination. There it is again loaded on a truck and hauled to your door where your goods are carried into your new home. The whole process involves two handlings—(loading and unloading)—no crating or extra handling to run up expense and possibly damage your goods.



This new way of moving saves you money. Rail rates are cheaper than trucking, costly crating is eliminated, handling is reduced to a minimum. Your goods are carried cheaply, quickly, safely, without bother or worry. If you are moving to another city investigate the economy and convenience of this modern moving method. Call

FIREPROOF STORAGE
All goods stored in our new, modern, fireproof warehouse, in individually locked rooms. A special vault for silverware storage. Reasonable charges.

SUBSTITUTES SUGGESTED IN FARM GARDENS

Extra Space Available For Uncommon Vegetables; Directions for Culture.

By HENRY R. EBY
County Farm Agent

Several valuable vegetables not commonly grown can be recommended to gardeners who have more space than is needed for the ordinary crops.

As a substitute for early cauliflower, some growers use broccoli, Italian green sprouting. It is necessary to harvest the green shoots before the blossom buds open or the stems become tough. Otherwise, the culture is exactly the same as for early cauliflower.

Lima beans require a warm, mellow soil in order to get a good start. Some growers cover the seed with woods soil or composted manure mixture with light loamy soil. Others place a strip of black paper over the seeds until the beans break through the soil. Paraffined paper plant protectors also help, provided ventilation is given by making a small hole in the leeward side.

Kohlrabi may be sown early and plantings made until the middle of July or the first of August. The plants are thinned to stand four inches apart in the row. The thinnings may be transplanted. The "knobs" are harvested when two inches or less in diameter and are eaten raw or cooked much the same as turnips.

Table Queen, Acorn or Des Moines pumpkin, commonly called squash, is good to eat in summer and can be stored for winter. They can be cut in half and baked, stewed or made into pies. Another kind of summer pumpkin is called Vegetable Marrow and another, the Cocozelle. These grow on bushes. Straightneck is liked by some who grow a surplus for market. Blue Hubbard has gained popularity as a winter squash.

Swiss chard and New Zealand spinach, not over 10 feet row of each, will provide greens for summer and fall. Soak the seed of New Zealand spinach in water before planting. King of Denmark or Long Standing Bloomsdale spinach may be planted at about three-week intervals until August, if a continuous supply of the dwarf or true spinach is preferred.

CANADA WARNS DOUKHOBORS

THRUMS, British Columbia, May 16.—(AP.)—An ultimatum that the government will not permit further outrages was delivered by Inspector W. R. Dunmoody, of the provincial police, to an assembly of several thousand Doukhobors yesterday.

Both the community Doukhobors and the radical wing, the Sons of Freedom, attended the open air meeting. Several cases of disrobing were reported among the Sons of Freedom, but they occurred away from the gathering.

Peter Verigin, leader of the main colony, offered 2,200 acres of land, houses, buildings and schools at Crestovia, in the Slocan Valley, to the Sons of Freedom if they would settle in peace. He blames the Sons of Freedom for recent bombings and burnings.

The Sons of Freedom declined to commit themselves.

More Charges Face N. Y. Lottery Chief

NEW YORK, May 16.—(INS.)—Additional evidence against Henry Miro, Harlem policy game banker, will be introduced before the county grand jury on Monday, the district attorney's office announced today. Miro was indicted yesterday by a federal grand jury on charges of failure to file income tax returns.

The federal indictment followed his testimony in the Appellate division inquiry of magistrates' courts when he said he had banked $1,251,000 in four years.

Miro is under $15,000 on a perjury charge and must appear before Magistrate Stern on that charge next Thursday.

Specialist to Scan N. Y. Police Noses

NEW YORK, May 16.—(INS.)—Dr. Maxmillian A. Ramirez, director of immunology at the French Hospital, today took up his job as honorary consulting police surgeon. He is to look over all the noses of all New York's policemen, administering to those who suffer from rose fever, hay fever, asthma and kindred ills.

About 50 per cent of New York's policemen have nose trouble at this time of year, police officials said. Right now they are beginning to feel symptoms of rose fever.

Kaufmann Center To Present Play

"April's Lady" will be produced by the Irene Kaufmann Settlement Players, in the Theresa L. Kaufmann auditorium this evening as a feature of a community entertainment to be held there. The program will be supplemented by a number of specialty acts.

Children's Theater Plans Second Play

"The Princess and the Crystal Pipe" is the second play to be given by the Children's Theater in the Morris Kaufmann Memorial Auditorium next Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Jerome Katz, director of the Little Theater, is in charge of the production.

RED PLOT SEEN IN MINE STRIFE

HARLAN, Ky., May 16.—(AP.)—Gov. Flem D. Sampson, who said disorders in the Harlan County coal field were inspired by "Communists and Reds," has been upheld, at least, in part.

Adjt. Gen. W. H. Jones, Jr., after an investigation, reported to Col. Dan M. Carrell, in command of troops sent here to restore order, that he had discovered definite indications of Communist activity.

Gen. Jones and Col. Carrell declined to elaborate on the findings. They will be reported to Gov. Sampson, they said.

A conference was held at Pineville relative to arbitration of the dispute between miners and operators. The miners ask recognition of the union and disarming of the civilian mine guards.

Dr. Appel and Wife In Crash, Recovering

LANCASTER, Pa., May 16.—(INS.)—Bruised and shaken up when their automobile overturned on the Lincoln highway near Coatesville, Dr. Theodore B. Appel, state secretary of health, and Mrs. Appel today were recovering at their home here.

Clem Wouterz, chauffeur for Dr. Appel, was unhurt. The accident occurred, Dr. Appel said, when a rear tire blew out. Dr. Appel was bruised on the face and suffered a minor contusion of the nose. Mrs. Appel was bruised on the body and suffered face lecerations.

U. S. Enlist Fish In Mosquito War

WASHINGTON, May 16.—(AP.)—Governmental agencies have added new weapons in their efforts to keep President Hoover and other capital residents from being bitten by mosquitoes again.

One is an improved method of spraying oil and the other is a fish from the Carolinas, introduced into Rock Creek and other streams. The perch, the gambusia, takes to mosquito larvae as a small boy to ice cream.

Care Necessary in Nursery Shipments

All nursery stock should be unpacked immediately on its arrival and handled in a manner to prevent drying out before planting. Packed closely, as is necessary in shipping, the plants may overheat. Delay of a day or two during a warm spell may cause severe injury. Roses and strawberries suffer quickly.

Do not expose roots to sun and wind in planting. Exposure for 15 minutes on a sunny, windy day may be fatal, or cause slow starting and poor growth. Wet burlap covering the roots is one way to protect them while planting.

111th Infantry Vets To Hold Memorial

The annual memorial services of the 111th Infantry Veterans' Association, A. E. F., will be held next Sunday afternoon in the Gen. Albert J. Logan Armory, Bayard and Thackeray streets. Gen. E. C. Shannon, lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania and war-time colonel of the regiment, will be the principal speaker. Maj. A. V. Simoni, war-time chaplain, of Fort Sheridan, Ill., will also speak.

Girl, 16, Arrested Operating Big Still

PHILADELPHIA, May 16.—(AP.)—A 16-year-old girl, found operating a 50-gallon still in the home of Mrs. Jennie Piazzo, was arrested in a raid today.

The girl, Louise Pellegiano, and Mrs. Piazzo, were charged with illegal possession of liquor. Police said the girl told them she "was working only for wages."

Movie Show Benefit To Aid Babies' Home

A moving picture show for the benefit of the Jewish Home for Babies will be held next Sunday night in the Fulton Theater. In addition to the movie performance, orchestras under the direction of David Broudy and Nick Parillo will feature special music. Mrs. M. A. Goodstone, chairman, has announced that the show will take the place of the annual linen contributions to the home. The home is now caring for 92 children.

PILGRIMS FETE SAINT THERESE

LISIEUX, Normandy, France, May 16.—(AP.)—This old world town tomorrow will become the goal of a religious pilgrimage that will bring visitors from all over France and beyond the seas. Sunday is the sixth anniversary of the canonization of Saint Therese of the Infant Jesus, the Carmelite nun whose veneration is general throughout the Roman Catholic world.

Held up as a model for young womanhood of all countries, Saint Therese will be honored here in her own town by the dedication of an enclosure destined to surround the great "Basilica of Peace" which is to be a monument of her memory.

For the past two days, beginning with the Feast of the Ascension, a triduum has been in progress at the chapel of the Carmel, where the shrine of the "Little Flower" is situated. Tomorrow morning solemn pontifical high mass will be sung there. Immediately after, on the hill where the basilica will be erected, the site will be formally blessed.

The basilica's crypt, destined to contain the remains of the saint, will be dedicated next Easter.

FERTILE SOIL REQUIRED FOR WINDOW BOXES

Sand Mixture Insures Free Drainage; Watering Necessary to Growth.

For window boxes use good rich soil. It should be open and porus to insure free drainage and so the fine plant roots can work their way easily through it.

Good soil has plenty of humus in it, thoroughly decayed vegetable matter. If the garden in past seasons has been well manured, that soil will answer. If desirable soil is not at hand, go to a greenhouse and get soil from the florist's compost heap. This is made of rotted grass sods and manure; be sure that this kind of material is had.

Mix with it about one part sand to three parts soil and make a thorough job of the mixing. A couple of handfulls of commercial sheep manure can be mixed, also thoroughly, with each peck of soil. Use no other fertilizer. Fertilizer can be used to do more harm than good.

After the plants have started in growth and grown well for some time, a little weak liquid manure may be given about every two weeks, to keep the plants flourishing, although that may not be required, if good soil is used in filling the box.

Window boxes should be watched in warm weather and water applied as often as needed to keep the soil from becoming dry. Sprinkling the plants early in the morning or at sundown will be beneficial.

Scotch Soot Aids In Plant Growing

Scotch soot is a valuable plant food and dusted on plants and around them it discourages slugs, caterpillars, grubs, cutworms, wireworms, etc.

Soot water is a good tonic for plants. This is made by placing the soot in a burlap bag and suspeding it in water, moving the bag about in the water and squeezing it. The soot water should not be too strong. Dilute it until the color is about that of weak tea. Seedsmen sell Scotch soot.

Bone Meal Good Food for Roses

If the roses have not been given a liberal application of manure, do not wait longer. Spread bone meal for its lasting effect. Then spread commercial cattle or sheep manure sold by seedsmen and work it in lightly. Do not let roses suffer for water if the weather is dry.

GARDEN TOPICS

As soon as the tulips have finished flowering, they may be lifted and planted in an out of the way place for the foliage to ripen off.

Limit the number of shoots on delphinium to not more than six to a plant.

Remove suckers which spring up around trees and vines. The wisteria produces suckers prolifically.

Seeds to be sown in the conservatory and greenhouse included calceolaria, cineraria, primula, stocks, asters and enterrhinums.

Cut off the seed pods from tulips and narcissi.

Shoots of roses that are growing inward, toward the center of the bush where they will cause crowding, should be cut off at once.

IVY DOES WELL IN ROCK GARDEN

We are building a rock garden, sunken with a fish pool. There will be running water over the rocks. We have iris plants, but would like to know what vines will grow and cover the vacant spots. Steubenville, O.

English ivy, hedera helix, and the smaller leaved ivy hedera helix gracilis, vinca or periwinkle, euonymus radicans, all three are evergreens and will do well in sun or partial shade. Euonymus colorata is another good vine, rooting every place it touches the ground; the foliage is dark green in summer but turns bronzy red in autumn for the winter. Pachysandra is not a vine, but a low growing, freely branching plant, excellent for sun or shade. It is almost evergreen.

Proper Shrubs for Screening Purposes

K. M. E. Washington. For a quick growing hedge for permanently screening unsightly buildings, use fir trees, spruce or hemlock. These will keep the buildings screened from view winter and summer.

If deciduous shrubs can be used, hydrangeas, altheas, hawthorne, forsythia or snowballs make a fine show when in flower, used as hedges. The leaves fall in autumn and the branches alone remain. Privet is good for the same purpose.

PROPER SOIL FOR GLADIOLI

To grow prize winning blooms of gladioli, the bed must be prepared very early, immediately, as soon as the ground is sufficiently dry to dig in.

Take out the top soil from the bed as far down as it has been previously worked. That will include all the fertile soil, without bringing up any subsoil. Generally it will be found 8 to 12 inches deep.

That done, spade up the lower layer, fining it thoroughly. Over this spread a layer of well rotted manure, two inches deep. That accomplished, throw back the topsoil. If it is heavy, sand added or wood ashes will be beneficial.

Gladioli thrive on fertilizer of this kind when the roots encounter it at a depth of six or eight inches down.

Top Cosmos to Keep At Proper Height

Tall growing cosmos can be kept down to almost any desired height by pinching off the top shoot as soon as the plants have reached the desired height.

These bulbs are not bargain junk, bought up here and there to sell. They are clean, sound bulbs, 1½ inches in diameter, or more, direct from my 30-acre fields, that will produce fine flowers this season and delight every one who plants them.
I have originated and introduced 200 varieties. For four successive years I was awarded the prize for the best exhibit at the National Show of the American Gladiolus Society.

KEROSENE USE ADVISED IN ANT EXTERMINATION

Plants Sprinkled With Emulsion Saved From Ravages of Insects.

By EDWARD C. VICK
Garden Editor, Sun-Telegraph.

Ants on peonies do no harm themselves. What they are after is the aphids, the lice-like insects which are on the plants. Aphids are insects which multiply with remarked rapidity. They seek the juices of plants and, when numerous, weakening them very much and possibly killing them.

Mr. Vick

The ants are able to feed on the honey-like material which they draw from the aphids, which the aphids suck from the plants and which the ants cannot obtain directly from the plants. This does not injure the aphids, which have been called the ants' cows. Ants are known to protect the aphids over winter, keeping them in their nests, placing them on plants again in the spring.

PROTECTS APHIDS

Ants also carry the little insects below the surface of the soil and place them on the roots of plants, this being particularly troublesome with annual asters.

Ants are quite wonderful insects and authoritative books on their habits are very interesting.

Where there are ants on peonies it is difficult to rid the plants of aphids without getting rid of the ants. The ants are difficult to control, because they are so numerous and seem to come from so many different localities.

A satisfactory remedy on peonies is kerosene oil emulsion. This kills the aphids, and also the ants that [illegible]es. It leaves a harmless [illegible] on the plants which [illegible] and they left the [illegible]ne. One application [illegible]ce, or another may be [illegible]d.

[EM]ULSION ADVISED

Kerosene oil emulsion is made in a very simple manner. Mix two tablespoonfuls of kerosene oil in two cups of milk and then stir this in two gallons of water. Keep it well mixed and spray the plants, wetting the under sides of the leaves as well as the upper and also the stems.

Kerosene oil has a tendency to burn plants, so more tender plants might be injured by this strength.

A better preparation is prepared by shaving half a cake of ivory soap and dissolving this in hot water to make a thin paste. Then [add] the two tablespoonfuls of [keros]ene oil in a pint of milk. [Add] the milk and oil solution [to] the soapy paste and mix [thor]oughly. Then add two gallons [of w]ater and mix well.

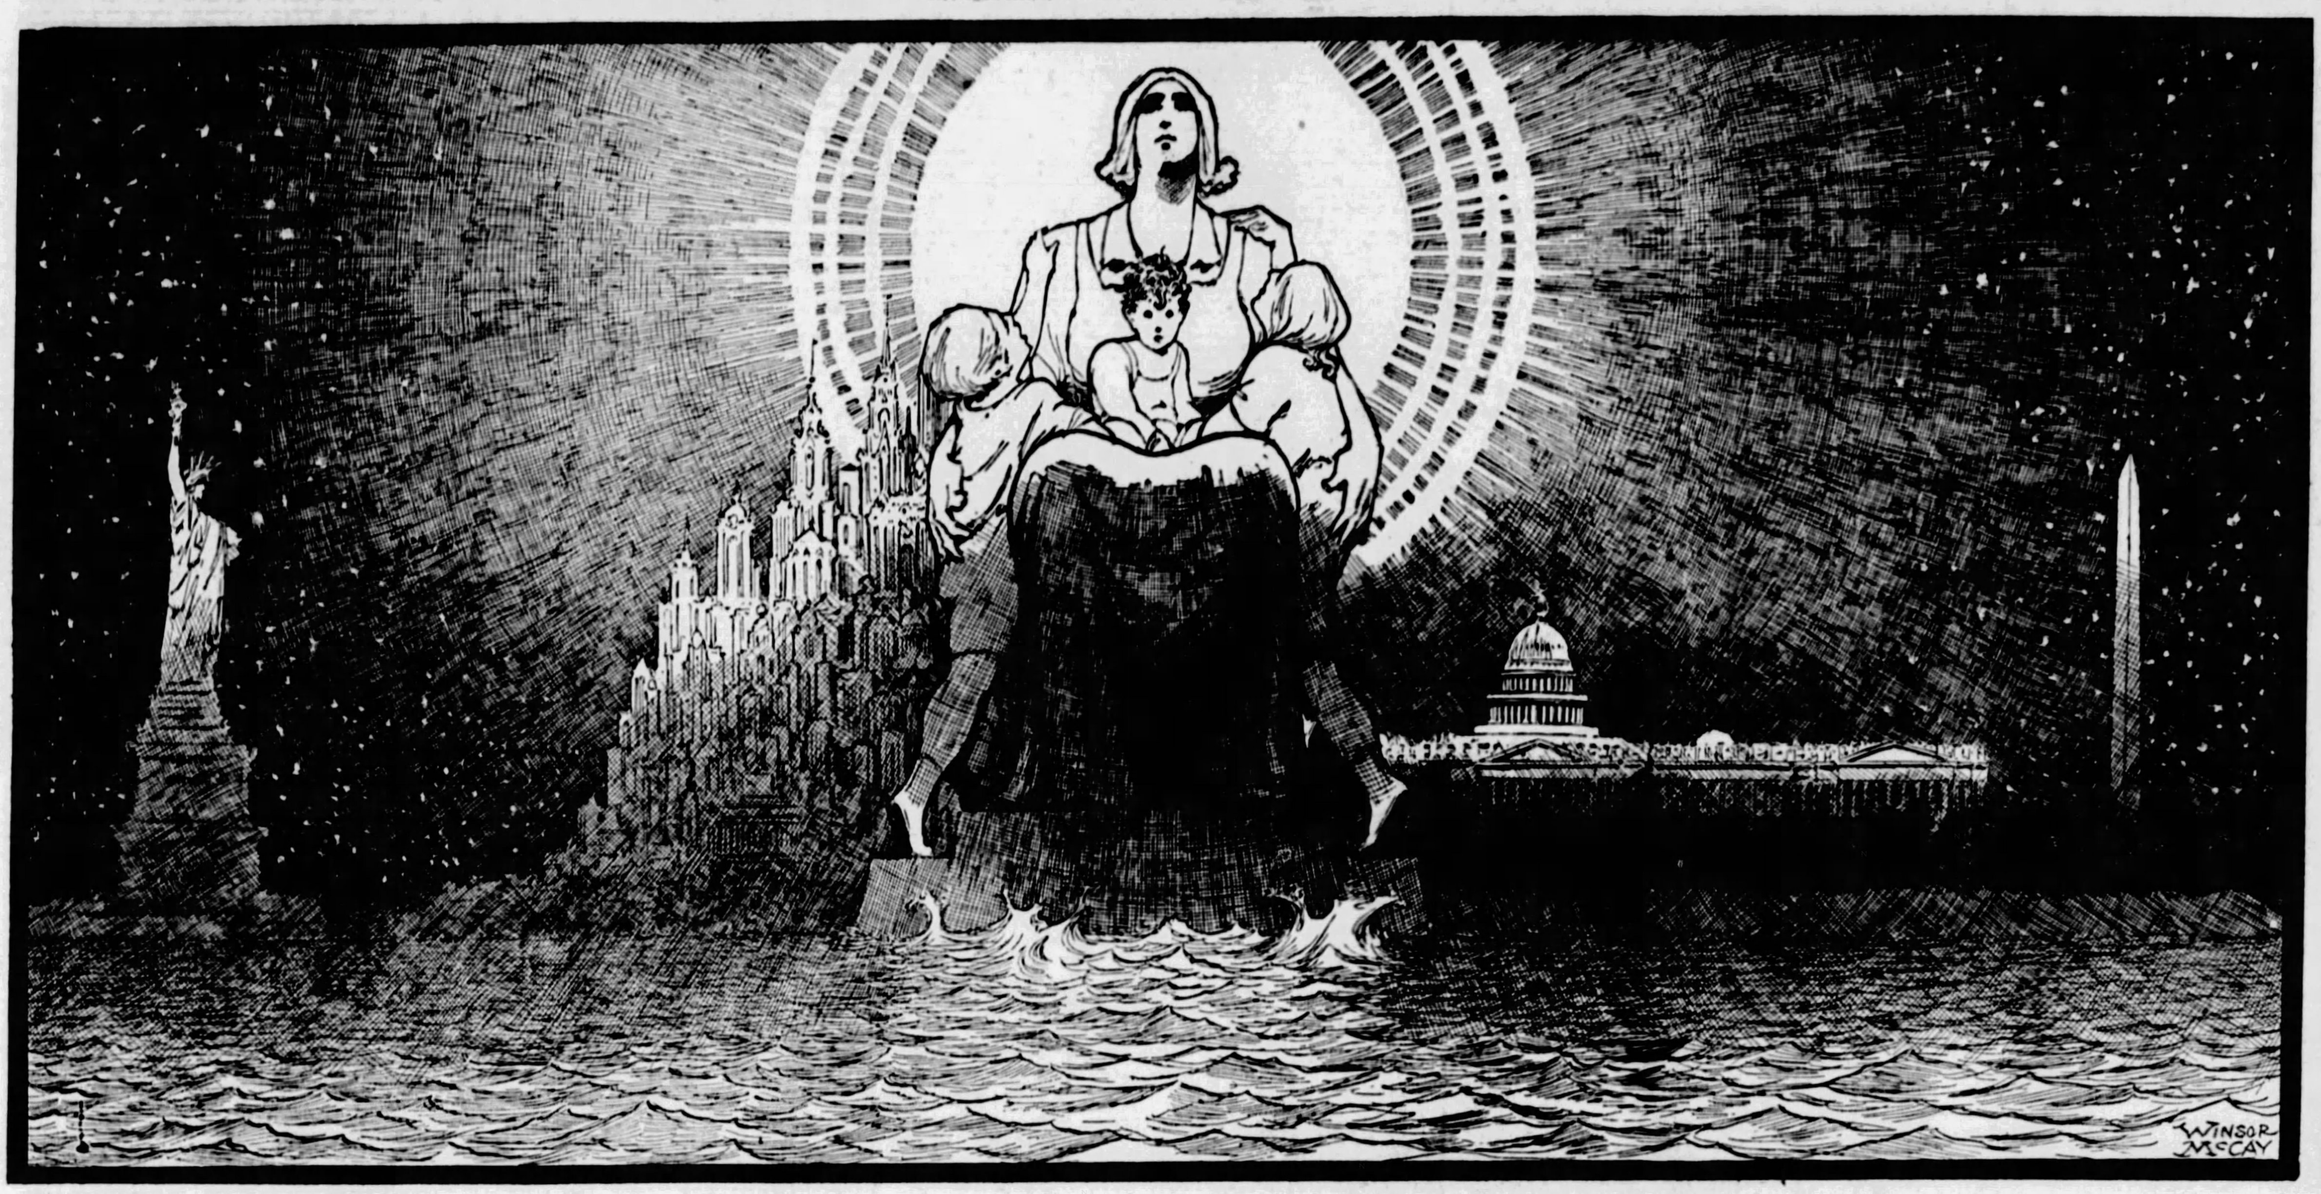
MOTHERS OF THE WORLD

Copyright, 1931, by N. Y. American, Inc. Great Britain Rights Reserved.



"Even He who died for us upon the cross, in the last hour, in the unutterable agony of death, was mindful of His mother, as if to teach us that this holy love should be our last worldly thought—the last point of earth from which the soul should take its flight for heaven."—Longfellow.

"A father may turn his back on his child, brothers and sisters may become inveterate enemies, husbands may desert their wives, wives their husbands. But a mother's love endures through all; in good repute, in bad repute, in the face of the world's condemnation, a mother still loves on; and still hopes that her child may turn from his evil ways, and repent; still she remembers the infant smiles that once filled her bosom with rapture, the merry laugh, the joyful shout of his childhood; the opening promise of his youth; and she can never be brought to think him all unworthy."—Washington Irving.

Recently the world celebrated Mother's Day. How many will forget that day, until another year, and another "Mother's Day" comes around!

Today, and tomorrow, and every day should be mother's day, or there is no REAL mother's day.

There is no REAL "Mother's Day" unless every day in the year is mother's day.

The world is what the mothers make it; and improvement in men, through the ages, is their mothers' work.

The hope of the world is not in its money, factories or land. Its power is in its MEN, and they are what their mothers make them.

Every human being owes his existence and his perpetual affection to a mother.

For the right kind of a man every day is MOTHER'S DAY.

FOR the right man, EVERY day is Mother's Day.

Every day is filled with gratitude, with affection and reverence for mothers, apart from all benefits received, from all cause for gratitude.

The mothers of the world have created its civilization, as they still create its population, descending, as has been truly said, into the valley of the shadow of death, risking their own lives to bring another life safely into the world.

The love of mothers, their care for their children, changed savages of the cave days into the semi-civilized beings of today.

The desire of the mother to have a settled and safe abode for her children changed the human race from migratory hordes, wandering from place to place, to settled populations, families firmly established, villages, towns, cities and great nations.

For every man killed in battle a mother's heart is broken. For every man disgraced, a mother is filled with sorrow, while others turn away, indifferent.

It was Mother's Day in some dark cave, a million years ago, when a mother gave her life to some attacking savage, animal or man, that her child might not be destroyed.

It was Mother's Day in a humble back-woods cabin, when a tall, gaunt mother held the baby, Abraham Lincoln, in her arms, and at once went about her work, as millions of mothers have done, and still do.

Where you see genius, courage, devotion to duty, patriotism, scientific achievement, you see THE WORK OF A MOTHER.

Adam, according to Martin Luther, called his wife Eve because that word means "the mother of all."

"He did not style her wife," says Luther, "but simply mother—mother of all living creatures."

You can judge a man fairly well by his feeling for the country of his birth, you can judge him absolutely by his attitude toward the mother, to whom he owes his life.

Every good man will say, with Richter, "Unhappy is the man for whom his own mother has not made all other mothers venerable."

Mr. McCay's admirable picture, in which all the great things of life, the towers of great cities, the Capitol at Washington and the White House, the Washington Monument and the Statue of Liberty are made small in comparison with motherhood, is a picture of truth.

In days to come the greatest monuments in the world will be erected to MOTHERHOOD, to mothers and to the devotion of mothers.

Men have not written on other subjects with the depth of feeling that inspires them when they write of motherhood, and especially of their own mothers.

Napoleon, cold as he was great, said, "The future destiny of the child is always the work of the mother."

When he was on the Island of St. Helena, with death not far away, all the world neglecting him, his mother never forgot, never ceased to work for him.

The influence of a mother is well expressed in a proverb of deeply religious Spain: "An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy."

Another says: "One good mother is worth a hundred schoolmasters."

Lacretelle says: "I would desire for a friend the son who never resisted the tears of his mother."

And another, Leopold Schefer, said: "But one on earth is better than the wife; that is mother."

In every book by a man worth while, in every life story of a great man, almost without exception, you find thanks, praise and devotion for mothers.

Thackeray wrote: "Mother is the name of God, in the lips and hearts of little children." And Mrs. Hemans wrote: "There is in all this cold and hollow world no fount of deep, strong, deathless love save that within a mother's heart." Dryden wrote: "I have not wept these forty years, but now my mother comes afresh into my eyes." Shakespeare expressed Dryden's thought thus:

"And all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears."

Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote:

"Youth fades; love droops; the leaves of friendship fall; A mother's secret hope outlives them all."

These quotations from men respected everywhere are printed here because they will give pleasure to mothers, some of whom, alas, have only too much need of encouragement and praise. For many mothers, unfortunately, there are no words in the English language so empty, so full of mockery as the two words "Mother's Day."

Man may well respect his mother if he wishes to respect himself, for that which is good in him comes from his mother. Herbert Spencer says: "The child takes most of his nature of the mother, besides speech, manners and inclination."

Millions of sons, living or dead, can say with Lord Langdale: "If the whole world were put into one scale and my mother into the other, the world would kick the beam."

Every man well may say it, but for his mother he wouldn't be here to put anything into any scale or to do anything else.

This picture is published and these words are written, with quotations to lend them strength, in the hope that they will give courage to some discouraged mothers that read them.

Every mother has DONE HER DUTY. She has obeyed God's commands, has suffered that another might live; she has given all that she could to the world.

A thousand books are filled with poems on motherhood. Here are two of the shortest, simplest and best of them.

"They say that man is mighty,
He governs land and sea,
He wields a mighty scepter
O'er lesser powers that be;
But a mightier power and stronger
Man from his throne has hurled,
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world."
—Wm. Ross Wallace.

"A mother's love—how sweet the name!
What is a mother's love?
—A noble, pure and tender flame,
Enkindled from above.
To bless a heart of earthly mould;
The warmest love that can grow cold;
This is a mother's love."
—James Montgomery.

"Know thyself" was written on the ancient Greek temple.

We cannot know ourselves, but every man can be judged, justly, by his attitude toward his mother, by his affection and reverence for [illegible]

MUSSOLINI SEES DANGER TO CIVILIZATION IN OVER-RAPID INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Only True, Permanent Wealth Of a Nation Is Derived From Soil, Says Duce

By BENITO MUSSOLINI

Premier of Italy.

(By Special Cable.)

ROME, May 16.

THE HISTORY of human civilization is basically a history of the means of subsistence found by man.

Hence the basis of civilization lies in agriculture. Besides the art of killing for self-nourishment and self-defense through hunting, fishing and fighting, agriculture is the mother art, the art that is essentially man's own.

BENITO MUSSOLINI

The art of killing for self-defense and self-nourishment is also known and practiced by wild animals. Agriculture, on the other hand, makes man think of himself and others, of laws and commandments, and gives him a stable residence, permitting him to nourish himself at the breast of the universal mother — Earth — without exhausting her resources and without destroying any living being or material wealth, but rather creating new forms of wealth and fecundity.

Immemorially, primitive man took nourishment from the earth just as she spontaneously gave it to him. When a man, or family, or tribe had destroyed all there was to destroy and devoured all there was to devour within a certain radius, he or it moved on elsewhere—so few were human beings and so immense this dark, mysterious, unexplored planet.

Nomadism
Quest for Food Kept Mankind on Move

But then comes in human history the moment in which some unknown genius thinks of domesticating animals instead of merely killing them for food. And in the world of our mute inferior brothers man makes his first friends. Was it the dog, man's first aid in self-defense, or the horse that was first to serve us docilely with its strength and its speed?

Certainly herds of sheep and goats and cows and oxen only came later. In fact, the domestication of these animals is ths first rudimentary form of agriculture, a form which does not eliminate the necessity for immigration, but slows it up. When a flock or herd has used up the pasture ground in a certain zone around a tent or grotto or cave, man can still lead it to pasture in a remoter place.

And in this interim a human family has a moment of ease in which to form a home of a certain degree of stability. Here, probably, the "woman" element enters the scene, trying to curb the man's tendency toward a nomad life, migration, and continual search for adventure. It is the woman who has within her the instinct for permanence and stability, and who suffers most from the discomforts of migration, personally and more especially for her little children.

The day on which man makes his first hoe and then the first rudimentary plough and cultivates the earth and sows it, migratory nomadism as an indispensable mode of life for humanity is ended.

War Prize
Weak Absorbed by Strong To Gain Lands

And history begins.

Nevertheless, even in comparatively recent epochs migration continues as part of the life of peoples, but it is the exception, no longer the rule.

Still later, in the days of the Roman Empire, Rome founded systematic nuclei for emigration into conquered lands with colonies of veteran soldiers.

As opposed to these forms of methodical emigration, other more barbarous forms were constituted by the successive waves of pressure from the nomadic peoples come from Asia to the eastern frontiers of Europe. From there they gravitated toward the "warm sea" and sunny lands of the Mediterranean basin. It may be said that all of Rome's history is summarized in her gigantic battle against these nomads, for she served as the bastion against such invasions and pressures.

With the discovery of America, the period of great sea voyages began.

The phenomenon of the emigration of peoples then becomes more complex, though remaining substantially the same. It is always the question of wars of conquest for new colonies, which is to say, for new outlets for each nation's imperative emigration; wars fought between great nations and the peoples they have conquered; Spain against England on one side, Europe against America on the other.

So had it happened in older times between Greece's cities for the possession of Sicily, and later between Rome and Carthage.

Closed Doors
Old World Migratory Waves Are Barred

Afterwards the nucleus of emigrants in the colonies, while continuing to conserve the fatherland's superior civilization, emancipates itself from the fatherland and forms an autonomous state. Nevertheless, it continues to attract enormous masses of immigrants to its lands. It is no longer a question of invading peoples. It is a pacific invasion of individual immigrants who feed and make greater the national entities, amalgamating themselves therewith rapidly.

Thus, in the course of 150 years, almost from nothing gigantic states have arisen, such as the Argentine, Brazil, the Australian Commonwealth, Canada, and most of all the United States.

But today these rich regions, and especially Australia and the United States, the latter of which is the richest of all, lock and bolt their doors and gates, and say to the migratory waves from the restless old world that ceaselessly beat on their thresholds:

"No, sir, beyond here you shall not pass."

Yet, despite this serious restriction of developable territory, there exists at the disposal of the world today a vast quantity of most varied products imaginable, because the increase in productive intensity has not been synchronized with an augmentation of the possibilities of consumption.

Hence the problem is no longer one of finding sustenance for swelling population, but of finding a market for ever-increasing production.

Correspondingly, as mechanical means multiply, cultivation becomes more rational and more intense, and the necessity for nomadism and the urge toward great migrations of peoples therefore diminishes.

Population
Its Increase Allied With Increased Wealth

In Italy in 1870 the number of inhabitants was about 26,000,000. The government then asserted that Italy was overpopulated and that a policy of emigration was necessary in order to provide for the ever increasing annual excess of population. Such an emigration took place. Nevertheless, demographic excesses occurred just the same and today Italy is inhabited by 43,000,000 souls whose living conditions are twice as high in standard as those that existed in 1870. And we are a strong race.

In agriculture, the introduction of farming machines has made possible the development of vaster territories and an increase in yield. While in 1900, three-fourths of the population of the United States were dedicated to agriculture, today the agriculturists form but one-fifth of the population. The value of the products of the soil, on the contrary, has increased from $5,000,000,000 in 1900 to the present figure of $17,000,000,000. The other four-fifths of the inhabitants are occupied in industries whose annual output represents a value of many billions.

England for many decades has been dependent on foreign countries for her food supply, nevertheless, due to her industrial development, she was the richest nation in the world before the war, despite the fact that in 1861

Wilkins Submarine a Scientific Laboratory Diving Like a Whale in Arctic Ice Lanes, Says Stefansson

PROPHETIC—A facsimile of frontispiece of the book by Bishop John Wilkins, with a portrait of the author, an ancestor of Sir Hubert, who suggested in this book, written in 1648, the idea of submarine navigation to North Pole.

REALIZATION — The submarine Nautilus, in which Capt. Wilkins expects to fulfill the idea of his seventeenth century ancestor by an undersea voyage to the Pole. This picture was taken during recent diving tests of the Nautilus at Yonkers.

Explorer's Ancestor Originated Idea of Undersea Navigation In 1648

By VILHJALMUR STEFANSSON

Noted Arctic explorer and discoverer of polar islands; first white man to travel long distances across drifting pack ice while living by hunting, making a 700-mile journey with two companions; medalist of geographical societies in London, Paris, Berlin, Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia and New York.

SIR HUBERT WILKINS says he got from me the idea of polar exploration by submarine. That was in 1913 when we were traveling together by dog sledge over drifting and broken sea ice on my third Arctic expedition.

Wilkins had learned flying three years before; I had been walking around on the land and the partly frozen seas of the Arctic for seven years. Now he kept arguing that we ought not to be using dog sledges, for flying had become the best means of Arctic transportation. I agreed about the transporation, but it seemed to me that there would be no real exploration by flying—nothing more than reconnoitering.

Exploration is scientific study, and study requires leisure. No method can give you more leisure than just such sledge travel as we were doing from 1913 to 1918 on this third expedition of mine.

But for the best scientific study you need a laboratory, and this could not be hauled along on sledges. It could be carried on a ship, but a ship could not penetrate far within the ice.

It appeared to me that the only transport solution which gave leisure, a scientific staff and a laboratory, with a freedom of movement and access to every part of the Arctic, was the submarine.

When ice floes are scattered, a submarine can navigate among them like a steamer cruising among islands. If the floes touch on the corners to stop surface cruising, a submarine can dive, as whales do in the Arctic, and come up in the free water on the other side. With the use of submersible craft, the open water that had had been such a curse to all the sledge explorers of the past would become a blessing. The ice which had obstructed the ship explorers would cease to be a barrier.

The cracks in the ice, wider than the Hudson and sometimes wider than the Mississippi, used to delay advance by sledges weeks at a time. They would now become canals, to be navigated like the Mississippi in the steamboating days.

Aviation Era
Submarine Disdained in Post-Bellum Days

It appears now that Wilkins was even in 1913 converted to the use of submersibles for polar exploration. But the war came along and this drew him into flying with the Australian forces on the Western Front. After the war he took part in an airplace race from England to Australia, and there were many things which conspired to center his attention on the airplane rather than the submarine.

Besides, 1918 to 1928 was a flying age. Throughout the English-speaking countries there was a horror of the submarine because it had been a successful war engine of the enemy; there was a friendly charm about the planes, for they had been successful in our hands, especially during the last year of the war. The newspapers were full of aviation propaganda. Money is necessary for exploration and it was easy to get money for a flying expedition. In fact, there was a period of several years when the public was so hipped on flying that it was practically impossible to secure money for any scientific exploration that did not have some flying angle.

These and other things led Wilkins into his notable career as a flying explorer.

He was the first to cross by air a high range of Arctic mountains, the first to land with skiis and take off again from the moving Arctic pack, the first to save himself instead of being rescued when an airplane had to be abandoned far at sea, the first and to date the only commander of an airplane to fly across the Arctic, the first to fly an airplane in the Antarctic, and the first to make there geographic discoveries from the air.

But all his successes confirmed him in the view that airplane exploration is really a misnomer. It should be called airplane reconnoitering. You have to slow down for the methods of science, and you must have laboratories.

The Originator
Venture Conceived Nearly 300 Years Ago

You can go slow enough with dogs. But only a submarine can give you both leisure and a laboratory.

To all these same conclusions Lincoln Ellsworth had been led during the same 10 years through his airplane and dirigible work with Amundsen in the Arctic.

Such, then, appears to be the history of the plans behind the Wilkins-Ellsworth Nautilus Expedition.

But the idea of navigating the Arctic by submarine is much older and more romantic. Usually it is supposed to have come from the brain of a Frenchman of genius who penned the fascinating romance of Captain Nemo and his Nautilus. However, the real originator of the idea was not a fiction writer but a clergyman, not Jules Verne, who published in 1869 the book "TWENTY THOUSAND LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA," but John Wilkins who published 221 years earlier, in 1648, a work called "MATHEMATICAL MAGICK."

For in Book II of "Mathematical Magick" is a chapter "Concerning the Possibility of Framing an Ark for Submarine Navigation." In that chapter you will find the germ of nearly every idea that was developed by Jules Verne more than two centuries later in the romance of Captain Nemo; you will find in it also the essence of the program of the present expedition of Hubert Wilkins.

The Hubert Wilkins plan of 1931 is a modern elaboration of two fundamentals stated by John Wilkins in 1648. For he says about the submarine: "'Tis safe . . . from ice and great frosts which do so much endanger the passages towards the Poles," and "it may be of unspeakable benefit for submarine experiments and discoveries."

Were it not for the printed books by John Wilkins which are available in at least a hundred libraries throughout the world, it would be difficult to convince ourselves that a man who was born before Shakespeare died could have laid down a definite forecast of polar exploration by submarine. The answer is that he was one of the most remarkable men in the entire history of science.

When John Wilkins was 17 he was already a Bachelor of Arts from Oxford University. At 24 he published a book about the possibility of a journey from the earth to the moon. That was 227 years before Jules Verne astonished the world (1865) with his "creative imagination" when he published "FROM THE EARTH TO THE MOON." Last year (1930) there was organized in New York City the American Interplanetary Society, for the purpose of considering such problems as how to reach the moon—among the membership famous scientists and distinguished professors from various great universities.

When John Wilkins was a half-grown lad, Francis Bacon died, still believing that the earth was stationary and that the sun and stars revolved about it. Wilkins' book, "A DISCOURSE CONCERNING A NEW PLANET, TENDING TO PROVE THAT ('TIS PROBABLE) OUR EARTH IS ONE OF THE PLANETS," was the first presentation in England of that idea, and was met with a storm of ridicule.

Earlier Wilkins
Sir Hubert's Ancestor Was His 'Prophet'

When Wilkins was 34 he became warden of Wadham College, Oxford, and there began to meet at his house a discussion group. Philosophers they called themselves, but we think of them as forerunners of modern science. It was this group which developed into the Royal Society, of which Wilkins was the first secretary. Ever since, this has been the leading scientific society of the English-speaking world, if not of the world as a whole. Before it have been announced many of the greatest discoveries and formulations of science.

The secretaries of the Royal Society have been correspondingly distinguished from the first of them, John Wilkins, to the incumbent, Sir James Jeans, a foremost astrophysicist as well as the author of "best sellers."

The plan of exploring the polar regions by submarine, therefore, comes to us from one of the greatest of scientific pioneers. It comes from him in a double sense. For John Wilkins, who married the sister of Oliver Cromwell, is a direct ancestor of Capt. Sir Hubert Wilkins, who now commands the Wilkins-Ellsworth Arctic Submarine Expedition.

However, Capt. Wilkins had formulated his submarine plans long before he knew that one of his ancestors had written a book called MATHEMATICAL MAGICK, in which he had advocated the use of submarines for undersea scientific studies and for polar exploration.

LAST SUNDAY'S ANSWER

ECONOMIC WORLD SIMPLY ADJUSTING ITSELF FOR A NEW FORWARD RUSH, SAYS L. F. LOREE

When We Stop Having Panics We Stop Making Progress, He Says

By LEONOR FRESNEL LOREE
President Delaware and Hudson Railroad.

In a Dialogue with George Sylvester Viereck.

PRESENT: Leonor Fresnel Loree, president of the Delaware and Hudson, and the Interviewer. Mr. Loree, a curious combination between the artist and the merchant prince, looks as if he had stepped out of a picture frame. His black hair, in spite of his 70 years, resists the inroads of time and contrasts strangely with his gray beard and with his bushy eyebrows, in which gray and black struggle.

PLACE: The Mutual Life Building in Nassau street, a stone's throw from Wall street, New York. A long rambling suite of offices done in white in the Empire style. In the most imposing of these, Mr. Loree at his desk, from where he can survey a picture of the first locomotive ever run in America, which made its debut on the Delaware and Hudson.

I: What about the mess in which the world has gotten itself economically?

LOREE: I see nothing unusual in it. I have seen four major panics come and go. Panics are the price we pay for progress.

I: I don't get that.

LOREE (pleasantly): If we had no disturbances of this type it would mean we were dead. They are the result of accumulated economic and industrial maladjustments. Every new invention, every new industry, every step forward dislocates our economic system and requires readjustments. Violent readjustments are necessary from time to time.

If you see West Point cadets marching up and down on the parade grounds you can call them to a sudden stop and every cadet will be in his place. They have kept their perfect alignment. But march them across a plowed field for a mile and call a halt and it will take some time before they can reassemble in good shape. Business is in the same position. It has encountered many obstacles and it must pause to recover its breath and to close its ranks.

I: Are panics, then, inevitable?

LOREE: When we stop having panics we stop making progress.

I: Is there no way in which we can alleviate the shock of economic readjustments?

LOREE: Panics, while unavoidable, can be mitigated. During the panics of 1893 and 1907 currency almost disappeared. Money seemed to fly away like a frightened bird. We have no famine of currency in the present cataclysm.

I: To what do you ascribe that?

LOREE: To the financial reforms so admirably planned by Senator Aldrich and Paul M. Warburg. The Federal Reserve saved us from currency disorders. If it was possible to eliminate this source of trouble we can also eliminate others.

I: How would you lay the ghost of unemployment?

LOREE (smiles): This company has not dismissed a single employe during the panic.

Labor Reform

Flexible Day Plan Keeps Men in Their Jobs

I: How do you achieve this miracle—by dipping into your reserves?

LOREE: No. By introducing the "flexible day." Some nine years ago we organized our forces on the theory that they should be sufficient to take care of all our work during an eight-hour day. When business increases we lengthen the working day instead of increasing the number of employes. When it decreases we cut down to eight working hours. Since the depression we introduced the five-day week after consulting our employes. When the number of working hours increase wages go up in proportion. When they fall there is a similar diminution. An extreme depression like the present may compel our forces to make certain retrenchments. But no one wanders about the streets looking in vain for a job.

I: Do you think that the "flexible day" would be feasible in other lines of industry?

LOREE: I believe most railroads and many other businesses can adopt the idea. If not, the problem could be worked out in different ways.

I: Are you the originator of the "flexible day"?

LOREE: It is one of my hobbies. I have always been interested in the relationship between the railroad and its employes. No business can be run successfully when the men who make its wheels go round are dissatisfied or underpaid.

I: I still do not see why the demorilization of business could not be avoided entirely. Someone must have upset the applecart of business?

LOREE: It is manifestly unfair to blame any man or any group of men for the recurring economic disasters which seem to be inherent in business.

Destinies

Catastrophes a Part of The Cosmic Order

The World War killed many men in the vigor of youth. During that time we had two epidemics of the "flu." Many more died from the "flu" than from the war. Not long ago there was a blight which killed every chestnut tree in the United States. Only recently an earthquake killed a thousand people. If such things happen in a God-made world, why should we be surprised if things go wrong now in a man-made society?

I: It seems to me that Providence must accept responsibility for both sets of disasters.

LOREE: I have no doubt that Providence does not shirk the responsibility. I don't criticize Providence. I presume that these things are part of the Divine scheme, or links in an inescapable chain of cause and events. I believe that the same is true of the catastrophes which occur and recur according to some law, not yet perfectly stated, in industry and finance.

I: What caused the special maladjustments which, in your opinion, are responsible for our present plight?

LOREE: Stimulated by the war, production in many lands grew with unprecedented speed. Many of our industries, the automobile, electricity, wireless, are comparatively young. The world has not yet completely adjusted itself to them. The inventive genius of mankind destroyed the equilibrium of production and consumption. It will take time before our balance is completely restored. Then we must look to see new inventions upset it again!

I: Do you expect many innovations in railroading?

A New Fuel

Smokeless Coal Instead Of Electrification

LOREE: The progress of railroads in the last 50 years consists mainly in the elimination of waste. We have cut out unnecessary delays in freight yards and in traffic.

I: Do you think that all railroads will adopt electrification?

LOREE: I think that electrification is not feasible on a large scale. Its only object is to avoid smoke. We have now devised an almost smokeless locomotive, which utilizes a powdered coal that looks like black talcum powder.

I: Have you introduced this new fuel?

LOREE: Not yet. Its introduction has been temporarily delayed by hard times, but the problem itself is solved.

I: A great engineer told me that the railroad men deliberately delayed progress, that trains could be much speedier than they are today if the railroads were not afraid of the expense of adopting the latest discoveries of science.

LOREE: The railroads are utilizing new inventions as quickly as practicable. Innumerable improvements followed in the first few years after the successful trial of the "Rocket," the first locomotive, in 1829.

Half of the total railroad business is on 10 per cent of the total mileage. The railroads comprising this group are known as first-class roads. The so-called intermediate roads handle 48 per cent of the total tonnage on 60 per cent of the mileage, while the remaining 30 per cent of the mileage, constituting the minor roads, handles less than 2 per cent of the tonnage.

Reconstruction

Will Require 10 Years For Completion

Almost all the railroads in the first group, including the Delaware and Hudson, must rebuild their entire systems to meet the increased speed of trains and weight of cars and locomotives.

The railroads are like a youngster who must discard his trousers every now and then, not because they are worn out, but because he outgrows them.

I: The reconstruction of your lines should do much to overcome unemployment. The president of the Pennsylvania Railroad told me he was expediting the expenditure of funds intended for this purpose; that he would spend $175,000,000, originally intended to be distributed over four years, in two or two and one-half years.

LOREE: All railroads are working along these lines. It will take 10 or 15 years before the reconstruction program is completed.

I: Are you accelerating your expenditures to meet the present crisis?

LOREE: Every railroad must meet that problem in accordance with its specific conditions. My philosophy has always been to make haste slowly, whether times are bad or good.

I: What are the difficulties which impede the progress of railroads?

LOREE: Some German, I think it was Gen. Hans von Seeckt, said that the three things against which man

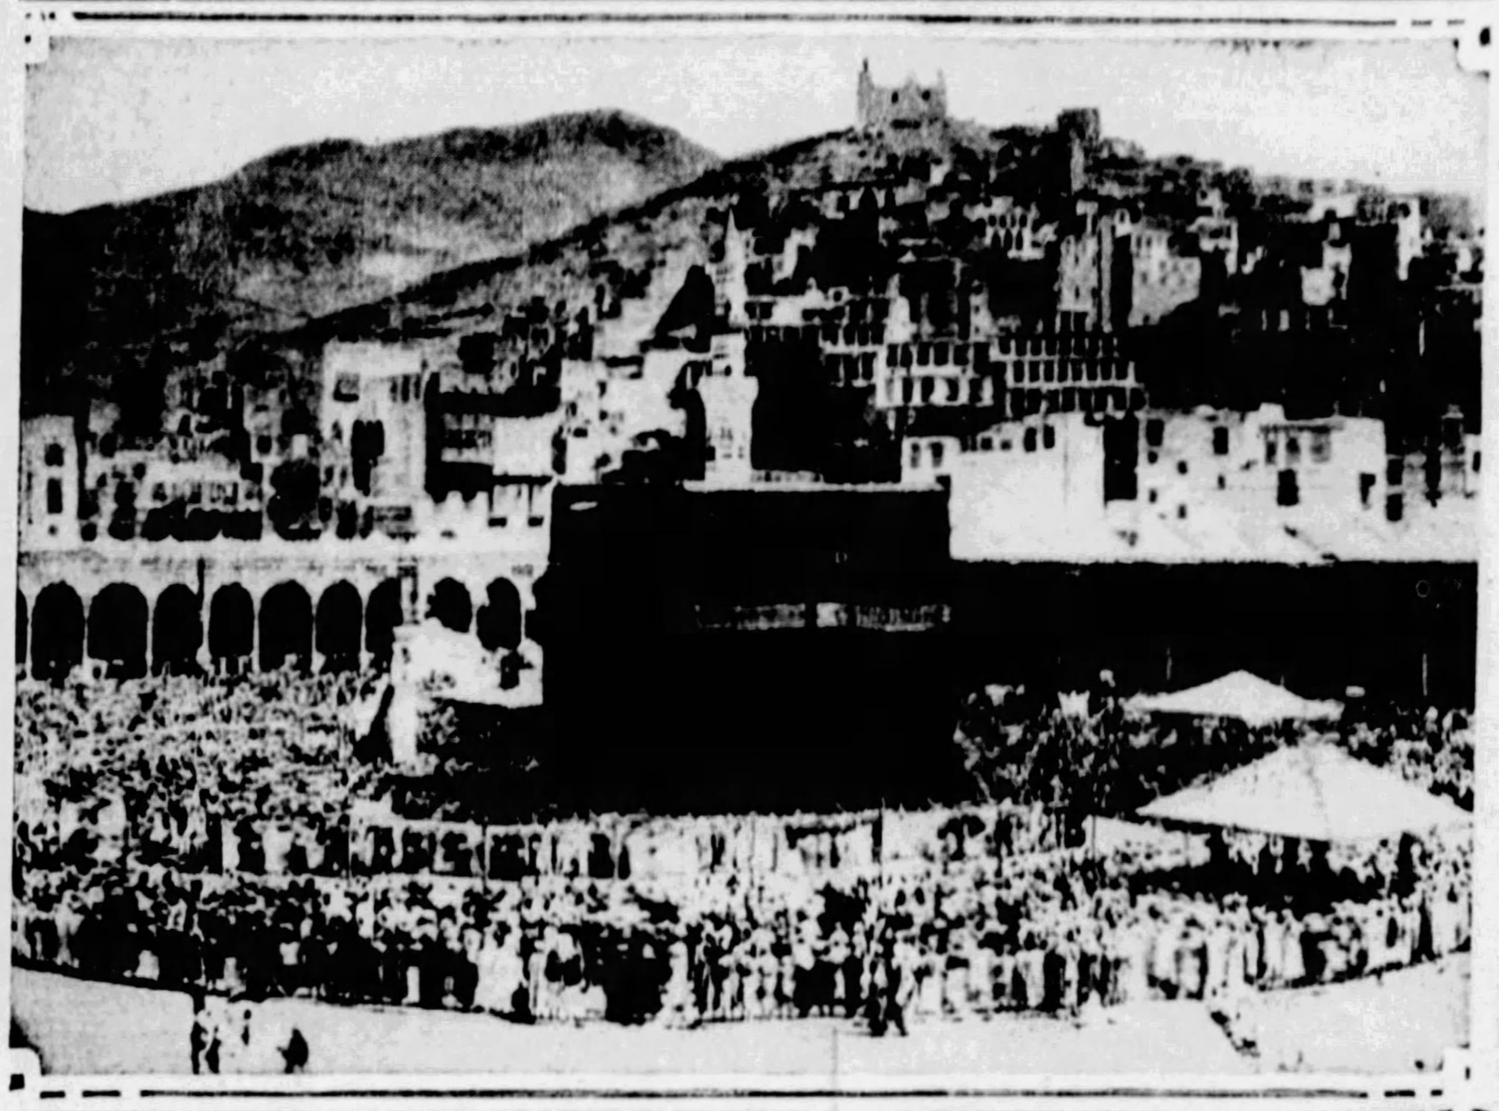
Arab Nations Are Moving Toward A Great Militant Moslem Union



HOLY OF HOLIES—A view inside the great Mosque at Mecca, Arabia. In the center is the Kaaba, the sacred shrine of Islam, surrounded by Mohammedan pilgrims. It is toward this shrine that devout Moslems pray daily, wherever they are.

Above, King Ib'n Saoud of Hedjaz, embracing the greater part of Arabia, and (at left), King Feisal, the ruler of Irak, whose capital is in ancient Bagdad. These two picturesque monarchs are the chief figures in the Arab Renaissance discussed in the accompanying article by Mr. von Wiegand.

Treaty Between Irak and Hedjaz Foreshadows Pan-Arabian League, Says Wiegand

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND
Chief Foreign Correspondent of the Hearst Newspapers.

CAIRO, Egypt, May, 1931.

THE HOPE of a Renaissance is beginning to stir the Arab world. The awakening and modernization of China, the aspirations and struggle of India for self-government, the striving of Egypt for independence, the example of Turkey, all are contributing to incite Arab thought to dreams of a renewal of past glories.

KARL VON WIEGAND

Increasingly the Arabic language press is sounding the note that what is happening in China and in India should find an echo in the Moslem world.

The conclusion of a treaty of friendship and arbitration between Irak and the greater part of Arabia, known as Hedjaz, is a symptomatic sign. It is a step in the direction of a Pan-Arabian League.

King Feisal of Bagdad and King Ib'n Saoud of Medina and Mecca have buried the battle axe. Ib'n Saoud drove out of Mecca King Hussein, father of Feisal, now King of Irak. Feisal has, in the interest of a rebirth of great Arab power and influence, forgiven his father's enemy.

King Abdulla of Transjordania is to be drawn into a Triple Alliance of Arab states. That is to be the beginning of a Mohammedan confederation of independent Arab nations.

The outstanding figure in the Arab world and in this as yet scarcely crystalized movement is Ib'n Saoud, the Wahabi King of Arabia.

Diplomacy

Subtlety Is Being Substituted for Force

The East has ample reasons for being suspicious of the altruism and disinterestedness of the West. Now that China is in the process of gradually pushing the White Man's exterritoriality and special privileges into the sea, India's 320,000,000 with Mahatma Gandhi at their head, demanding their own, western Machiavellian diplomacy is sometimes seeking to substitute subtlety where force can no longer be used.

Puppet Kings and Sultans, created by western powers, paid by western money, are played off one against the other like pawns on a chessboard, in the interests of this or that power. Gifted with remarkable intelligence and vision, the King of Arabia is moving slowly and cautiously.

Ib'n Saoud is one of the five remarkable figures that the ever-turning Wheel of Time has brought up in Asia since the end of the World War. The other four are Mahatma Gandhi in India, Mustapha Kemal Pasha in Turkey, Chiang Kai-shek in China, Riza Khan in Persia.

The Wahabi King of Arabia started on his career of Arab conquest among his own people with only 40 men, armed with antiquated guns. Today he rules two-thirds of Arabia.

As a personality Ib'n Saoud has unique claims to distinction other than mere statesmanship and warrior qualities. He is the Royal "Sheik of Sheiks." The late Rudolph Valentino, ideal of many women the world over, was a back number in comparison. Ib'n Saoud is the Solomon of the East—in wives if not in wisdom.

The King of Hedjaz is about 50. Tall, of striking figure, face and natural dignity of bearing. He has an iron determination.

Ib'n Saoud is the most married, most divorced King, perhaps man, in the world today. He is the father of more children than any man of whom we have record. Consular officials at Jeddah, on the Red Sea, the port for Mecca, say that at the last count he had 126 wives. Others place the number at 140.

The Mohammedan Law of the Koran, which he observes scrupulously, allows but four legal wives to a man, be he king or commoner. So Ib'n Saoud has but four legal wives—at a time! There is no restriction upon the number of secondary wives or concubines, excepting the purse, nor upon the number of divorces.

The King changes his legal wives from time to time, taking new ones. He pronounces the divorce for himself. The Law of the Koran is very much the same as the Law of the Old Testament of the Christians.

Ib'n Saoud lives quite within the law. He is credited with considerably more than 100 children, by foreign consuls stationed at Jeddah. He is said to have 30 sons by legal wives.

In my world wanderings I have heard of but one man whom report credits with being a still greater "multiple papa." He is a former high British official who, after retirement, remained in the Sudan. He is credited with being the father of something like 300 children by Sudanese women. The latter are often strikingly beautiful — veritable ebony statues in features and figure.

Medals Taboo

Saoud Suspicious of All Foreign Influences

Ib'n Saoud is the only "dry" king that I know of. Hedjaz is the only dry country in existence, I believe, aside from the United States.

Wine does not go with women there. King Ib'n Saoud and his rigorous enforcement of no alcohol would delight our prohibition leaders. A drunken Arab is given 10, 20 and 30 lashes, according to the degree of his drunkenness.

Even the Foreign Legations and Consulates at Jeddah, the only place where foreigners may live, are strictly limited in the amount of alcoholic liquor they may import. The quantity is so small that none ever wants to give away a bottle or sell one.

Ib'n Saoud is the most democratic monarch in the world. He is the first king to abolish titles and decorations. He accepts no decoration from a foreign government. He is suspicious of all foreign influences.

Like the meanest of his subjects, he wears sandals and removes them when he goes into the mosques. A coarse brown robe like the Bedouins wear is his usual attire.

Prince Feisal, second son, is Foreign Minister to his father, while Prince Saoud, crown prince, is Regent at Nejd, one of the several capitals, when his father is absent. Either of them would in looks fill a Valentino role.

I said that in effect the law of the Old Testament still obtains in Arabia. That goes even to the holding of slaves that still prevails despite the League of Nations. A friend of mine in Jeddah was recently offered a 16-year-old girl from Mecca for $1,500, with the guarantee that she was a virgin.

Considering that there is little money in Arabia, girls come high, but they are little expense afterwards and can be sold again. The British concentrate chiefly on the suppression of slave traffic from Africa across the Red Sea. But, many a "blackbirding" expedition gets across with its cargo.

Slaves are well treated in Ib'n Saoud's kingdom. Occasionally slaves run away and come to the British Legation in Jeddah. The British authorities then go to considerable trouble to return the slave. It happened recently that such freed slaves find freedom too great a responsibility, and after a year suddenly return to their former owners.

Ib'n Saoud's particular foreign friend is the former British diplomat Philby, for some years Minister at Jeddah to Hedjaz. Philby turned Moslem, and since his retirement lives much of the time in Arabia. He is one of the few foreigners who can get into Mecca.

The King, to show his esteem, gave Philby a black girl the other day, so I was told by a European representative at Jeddah. The King's legal ex-wives, even if "legal" not much more than a year, are much in demand.

Jazz and cigarettes are rigorously barred from Hedjaz by Ib'n Saoud, as well as alcohol. Those are the three most outstanding "verboten" in his vast domain.

Gramophones may not be imported, and lest jazz penetrate Arabia, radios are not encountered. That makes Jeddah probably the dullest spot on earth for a white man or woman. Drinking water is condensed from the Red Sea. It tastes dead. Ice costs 12 cents a pound.

Ib'n Saoud well knows that a restoration of Moslem power, even to a modest degree, can be achieved only along the road of education and modernization and through co-operation.

Fourteen wireless stations have been ordered. Also four planes, nucleus of an air force. Motor cars almost ruined the country financially when the bars to them were let down.

Pilgrim 'Crop'

Adversely Affected by World Depression

King Hussein, whom Ib'n Saoud drove out, decreed that none but he might own an automobile in all Hedjaz. The Wahabi King, when he came, held that his subjects had the same right as himself to own and ride in motor cars. The result was that everything was sacrificed, even superfluous wives and slaves, to buy automobiles.

Omnibuses and motor trucks were substituted for camels on the pilgrim route from Jeddah to Mecca. There are now more than 2,000 cars in the country. Ib'n Saoud has an immense motor park himself, said b[e] some to equal the number of his wives. Cars may now be imported only with permission of the government.

Ib'n Saoud's most expensive personal tastes are wives, automobiles and hunting. He goes gazelle hunting with a retinue like a medieval king in Europe. Up to 50 motor cars, filled with wives, relatives and friends accompany him. The beautiful graceful gazelles, swift as the wind but not swift enough for modern racing motors, are shot down from the cars like cattle.

The principal "crop" of Arabia is pilgrims to Mecca. That provides the largest revenue to Ib'n Saoud. They come from China, the Philippines, Java, India, Afghanistan, Turkestan, Turkey, Persia and Morrocco. It is the ambition of every Moslem to once in his life make the pilgrimage to Mecca, the Holy of Holies.

Rich Mohammedans bequeath sums to Mecca, as Catholics do to Rome. But the pilgrim crop this year is hard hit by the universal economic depression. Instead of 85,000 pilgrims expected there will be scarcely 40,0[00]. That is a severe blow to [Ib'n] Saoud's treasury. Well, [illegible] screened.

Zamora Tells of Plans for People To Utilize Spain's Large Estates

Small Holders Will Till Land

THIS is the third of a series of articles by Provisional President Alcala Zamora of Spain, dealing with the preparation for the republic and the overthrow of the monarchy. It was written before the violent events that began last Monday in Madrid, when mobs set fire to Catholic institutions and martial law was declared.

By NICETO ALCALA ZAMORA,
President of the Provisional Government of the Spanish Republic.

MADRID, May 16.

WHILE THE change of regime in Spain from monarchy to republic was effected under normal and unparalleled conditions of lawfulness, there were many moments of dramatic anxiety on that historic day—April 14.

The day before, the delirious enthusiasm of the masses in all cities gave an expression of joy at our triumph in the elections which, if not unexpected, was surprising in its gigantic proportions.

Demonstrations of Monday, April 13, continued until dawn of the fourteenth, and became more imposing, meeting without resistance, but with a discreet and comprehensive attitude on the part of the police.

Proclaimed
Spanish Republic Springs Into Existence

Just after daybreak the Basque industrial town of Eibar, not big, certainly, but very important, placed itself in the vanguard by proclaiming the Republic.

The same morning the Republic was proclaimed at Saragossa, Asturias, Seville and Valencia. Before noon the large and beautiful metropolis of the Mediterranean, Barcelona, had taken the same decisive step.

In Madrid, the first news received from the provinces decided the vacillations of the fallen regime. Dr. Gregorio Maranon, a distinguished physician, came to see me in behalf of Count Romanones, last Foreign Minister of the Monarchy, in order that in the Maranon residence (although the doctor is a Republican) the transmission of powers from monarchy to republic could be negotiated on neutral ground.

The meeting was brief, cordial and full of deep feeling. The desire to avoid useless bloodshed inspired both parties. I insisted that the King should leave behind, in addition to a document of renunciation of his rights, the authorization of his ministers to hand over the reins of government.

Count Romanones, who could not hide his deep emotion, made no objection. Later we saw that the King's renunciation had not been signed, although authorization of transmission of powers was given the government and ratified officially by Admiral Aznar, then Premier, on the morning of April 15, after he had returned from seeing off Queen Victoria.

Victory
Republican Flag Hoisted In Madrid

On the afternoon of the fourteenth time passed without our receiving definite word from the last monarchist government. In the palace the fickle Cabinet courtiers, instead of bowing to the inevitable, insinuated and suggested desperate measures for resistance or to gain time.

Very soon the Republican flag waved over the general postoffice as the official signal of triumph, and soon afterward over the Civil Governor's palace. The hoisting of the latter flag was in care of one of the revolutionaries who had been constantly persecuted, Don Eduardo Ortega y Gasset.

We could not find either Count Romanones or Admiral Aznar. As night drew near, bringing the risk that the huge, exasperated, though unarmed multitude, believing itself to be defrauded, might be involved in an attack by the police, the Revolutionary government—the eight members of the "shadow cabinet" residing in Madrid—met at the house of Don Miguel Maura.

We decided without further formalities to take possession of the government of Spain.

With but a few minutes of daylight left, we set out in two automobiles for the Home Office, in the Plaza del Sol.

In the first automobile rode the Republican Ministers of Interior, War, Labor and myself as President; in the second the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Justice, Navy and Public Works. Fortunately, we passed unobserved by the people until within 300 yards of the Home Office.

From there on progress was slow because of the delirious enthusiasm of the masses. It took us nearly a half hour to cover this last stretch.

Meanwhile, the King left Madrid. Two announcements made by me over the radio to all Spain and from the balcony to the people at Madrid provoked frantic outbursts of joy.

On successive days over a week we changed the military and civil commands, removed diplomatic representatives, and the like, without any opposition.

The Army and Navy ratified in writing the solemn and loyal adhesion.

The seizure, with proper formalities, and full guarantees, of the crown patrimony terminated within a few hours. It had been decided to hand over to the municipalities of Madrid, Barcelona, Seville and Palma de Malorca the palaces and parks, considered to be useful for beautifying and developing these cities.

The royal family left in different parties without being involved in disorder, discourtesy or danger.

The sudden panic, inevitable in such cases among small capitalists and those with limited savings, lasted hardly two or three days.

Estates
Small Holders to Cultivate Them

The Stock Exchange reflected the calm prevailing in the city streets. Market quotations rapidly recovered their lost ground. Certain suspicious maneuvres by the aristocracy and plutocracy, anxious to create difficulties and deliberately causing the flight of capital, were easily checked by the simple announcement of measures which the Government was ready to apply if necessary, and by readiness of the banks to lend aid.

The banks and the Chambers of Commerce were united from the first moment in support of the Government.

During the first week of the Republican regime the work of the dictatorship was submitted to revision intended to remedy wherever it was equitable and possible all wrongful acts committed, without, however, applying any exceptional arbitrary measures.

The Gazette daily publishes in addition to measures correcting abuses by re-establishing dominion laws, new measures which will be finally revised by Parliament, but which assure independence of the law courts and re-establish the institution of trial by jury.

To diminish unemployment the civil list of the royal family has been applied to its relief. Education is being modernized and pushed ahead. The army is being transformed and reduced without injury to its established rights or legitimate interests or without impairing its standard efficiency, but in keeping with the needs of pacific Spain.

Building up the social foundations of the state without alarming big land owners whose interests and social rights will be guaranteed, will be accomplished by indemnization, and the collective patrimonies of villages will be reconstituted.

Large ranches and estates, left neglected, will be cultivated by the formation of legions of small holders by workers' societies, or by the groups of tenants, with the way legally open for them to become owners of the ground.

(The recent decree of the new Spanish republican government for utilization of land in Spain along the lines described by Provisional President Alcala Zamora in the preceding paragraphs provoked a panic on the Madrid Stock Exchange among holders of Spanish certificates. According to calculations of experts, a total loss, represented by falling values during three days, amounted to 3,000,000,000 pesetas (about $370,000,000 at par). The principal state bond fell 7 per cent, representing a devalorization of about 700,000,000 pesetas.—EDITOR'S NOTE.)

We will re-establish the law of forced expropriation. This always will be applied gently on the basic principle of just indemnification, with the idea of opening new trade channels to great firms manufacturing modern machinery, which fortunately already exist in our country, and for purposes of reform or social utility, not merely for administrative ends.

With constant support of public opinion we will work without resting. With conscience at ease, and after having carried out our intensive labors, we shall present ourselves before a Constituent Assembly and with all rectitude deliver to the Cortes our executive powers. For a short time this will be without doubt the happiest and most tranquil moment of my political life.

Machine Age Threatens to Stifle Individual Thinking in U.S.--Fosdick

HEREWITH is the third of a series of articles by Raymond B. Fosdick, widely known lawyer and publicist, on "Are We Savage or Civilized?" In the preceding articles Mr. Fosdick said modern science has created the Machine Age, with no indications that humanity has correspondingly advanced to be able to control its own inventions. Consequently, to avoid a debacle, civilization must develop social sciences to counteract the materialistic efforts of natural sciences.

By RAYMOND B. FOSDICK

THE YEAR 1776 was one of history's great turning points. It was marked by three events of almost immeasurable consequences: the Declaration of Independence, which opened a new chapter in the philosophy and practice of government; the publication of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, which laid the foundations of a new economics; but chiefly the invention by a man named Wilkinson of a cylinder that made Watt's new steam engine really work.

RAYMOND B. FOSDICK

It was this cylinder that changed the course of history and the destiny of man. For beginning with Watt's steam engine we have pressed excitedly from one invention to another, harnessing new forces to ever new mechanical appliances. In the first eagerness of our pursuit we did not know that we were following a one-way path along which there could be no retreat.

We know now that we are not completely the masters of the machines which we have created. Their pulsations we can control, but their consequences control us. They have called into being hundreds of millions of people who otherwise would not have been born. For these hundreds of millions they are the sole means of existence. Stop the machines and half the people in the world would perish.

Economic
'To Survive We Must Buy,' He Says

It is this inescapable necessity of keeping the machines going that constitutes the great problem of modern economic life.

Idle machines mean starvation to the millions of people whom they have brought into the world; active machines mean a surplus of goods beyond the immediate capacity of the race to consume.

To this dilemma but one answer has been found: We have kept the machines going and we have done it by whipping up the demand for their products, by stimulating new desires, by creating new wants. Our problem has become not how to make things, but how to dispose of them; not how to produce goods, but how to produce customers.

Thrift, which our fathers prized as one of the marks of wisdom, has become a virtue of doubtful social and economic value. If we would survive, we must buy.

By this necessity of disposing of the surplus product of the machine the life of our age is shaped and dominated. It motivates our political thinking and is the chief factor in controlling our social institutions. It gives rise to what is fast becoming the outstanding characteristic of our time—the standardization of life, the stereotyping of possessions and environment in terms of fixed moulds.

All around the world the habits and possessions of men are shaking down to fixed, common levels. In a country like the United States the process is even more pronounced. The material side of life in America is fast developing a sameness, a uniformity, a monotony without parallel in history over so wide a geographical area.

But it is not alone on the material side of life that standardization is developing. Out of this environmental uniformity is coming a spiritual and intellectual uniformity of far greater significance.

There is something about mass production and distribution of goods that suggests mass production and distribution of ideas. If men have the same types of automobiles and food and furniture, why should they not have the same beliefs? If it promotes efficiency for men to dress alike and act alike, why does it not promote efficiency for men to think alike?

Conventional opinion tends to become more difficult to resist, and individual opinion more difficult to assert, as the development of science makes the collective judgments of the herd easier of ascertainment and expression. The step from mass production to mass thinking is, perhaps, shorter than we imagine.

Consequently, in the Machine Age individual self-assertion is subordinated to collective action; mass opinion tends to override its minorities and crush out the lone voices.

Truly, majorities are in the saddle. We in this generation face questions of great moment. They relate to the kind of world our children will inherit.

How can we maintain the freedom of expression and initiative of the individual when the machine process is accentuating the old herd instinct for solidarity?

Freedom
Self-Expression Must Be Untrammeled

Or, as Bertrand Russell phrases it, is it possible to have machinery in industry without having a mechanistic outlook in our thoughts and mental habits? Does the mass distribution of goods inevitably mean the mass distribution of ideas?

Somewhere in our scheme of things—indeed, at the very core of it—we must find place for the self-expression and spontaneity of persons. Somewhere we must lay the same emphasis upon the spiritual in his pursuit of what he believes to be good, regardless of the opinion of the mass, that was laid by Buddha and Lao-tsze and Jesus of Nazareth.

But what about the majority.? Our whole political system is based upon it.

Reverence for the majority is interwoven with our thinking about democracy and government. It has acquired an authority that protects it from criticism.

We need to be frank about this matter of majorities. Majority rule is a working plan by which we attempt in a rough way to determine policies of common concern. But to credit this clumsy device with a kind of centralized infallibility and to proclaim that the voice of the people is the voice of God is to talk nonsense. More than that, it is vicious nonsense.

There is real truth in Herbert Spencer's observation that majorities are generally wrong. As a matter of fact, it is always the minorities that hold the key of progress. The still small voice speaking through the conscience of a man, bidding him choose obloquy and ostracism rather than conform, is, now and always, the hope of the race. It gave us Wycliffe and Huss and Savonarola and William Wallace and Bruno and Hugh Latimer and a host of heroes and prophets who challenged the mass judgments of their generations.

Majorities
'They Are Generally Wrong,' Said Spencer

We come to an inevitable conclusion: in the realm of ideas standardization means death. Society cannot afford to stamp out variation from type; they are the biological steps by which the race advances.

Remorselessly and irresistibly the Machine Age has ploughed its way across the life of man. In the midst of the revolution we can scarcely tell the good from the bad, so great is the upheaval.

But this we know: that if, as an incident of the machine process, the opinion of the individual becomes more hampered in expression, and diversity and spontaneity are checked, then there are no compensatory advantages that can outweigh the disaster. Then, indeed, are we headed for spiritual bankruptcy.

The things that make life worth preserving are not created by mechanism, nor are they born of organization, however efficient. They come only from the freedom of the human soul.

Leonor F. Loree Looks for Beginning of Business Revival Late This Fall

contends in vain are catchwords, stupidity and bureaucracy. Catchwords held to justify legislation, stupidity enthroned in preposterous regulations and bureaucracy enforcing both, are some of the impediments against which the railroads are struggling heroically.

It will also be necessary to make certain readjustments in the relations between the railroads and labor. I have always opposed the reduction of wages. I think the character of the industry justifies the price of the labor market. But there are various so-called "feather-bed practices" foisted upon us by unwise legislation or labor union pressure which must be abolished.

I: What do you mean by "feather-bed practices"?

LOREE: There are nine methods creating an artificial scarcity of labor, 36 designed to make jobs, 27 designed to arbitrarily add to pay, 29 duplicate payments for the one service, 16 to procure pay for service not performed and 19 others restricting the conduct of the business. Some of these are laws to correct individual abuses. But once on the statute books they were applied to all railroads. For instance, in New York we are compelled to carry three brakemen on every freight train, while in Pennsylvania there is no legislative restriction, and we find two sufficient. This means we must carry one extra man in New York and ship him back when we reach Pennsylvania. This is only one instance of needless economic waste.

I: Do you think repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment will breathe new life into industry?

LOREE: No. I think that prohibition has been a benefit economically. I do not think (thoughtfully) that it has been a benefit morally. I know that the 19,000 men whom we employ in our mines drink less than before, but if I had been in charge of legislation I would not have made prohibition an integral part of the Constitution, nor have thrust upon the states the responsibility of concurrent enforcement. (A smile enlivens his ruddy features.) The Anglo-Saxon likes to put on the statute books his ideals of conduct, but expects no one to enforce these laws strictly.

Business, like art, must deal with intangibles. Look! (He points to the picture of the ornate office building of the Delaware and Hudson on the wall). When I built that office building in Albany it occurred to me someone would accuse me of spending too much money for the sake of making the building attractive. I had the architect carefully calculate what it would cost if, instead of using the Flemish architecture which I chose to commemorate the landing of the Half Moon, we built the plainest sort of factory building. The difference in cost amounted to 10 per cent. I think it was well worth while to invest that money in beauty. Beautiful buildings are an inspiration to workers and a monument to enterprise. These rooms (he looked around) are an imitation of the Petit Trianon, but (he touches a decoration) it is plaster. Plaster is cheaper than the mahogany which they use so lavishly in new office buildings.

I: Do you see any sign of improvement in the economic situation?

LOREE: The present crisis resembles the panic of 1893. In the following year railroad ton mileage for the country fell off 18 per cent. In 1930 it has fallen off 16½ per cent. It was not until 1896 that business began to revive. If precedent counts for anything, I look for a beginning of business revival late this fall or some time in 1932.

I: Where will the first signs of a revival appear?

LOREE: Pig iron, wheat, cotton and the railroads which carry 90 per cent of all movables in the United States, are the doves that will indicate the end of the flood that overwhelms us.

I: General Atterbury said to me that he was not sure if our business depression was a case of typhoid fever or a case of cancer.

LOREE (laughs): I don't think it is typhoid and I am quite sure it isn't cancer. It resembles more closely the growing pains of robust adolescence. Our minds and our bodies are wholesome. We shall scale new heights after bending our backs under the yoke of this depression.

Premier Mussolini Tells of Stimulus to Italy's Agriculture

she had a population of but 20,000,000 and a standard of life far below that of today, though today she has 45,000,000 inhabitants.

Increases in wealth are almost universally allied to increases in population.

Germany has undergone a change very analogous to that of the United States, where great masses of farmers and peasants have become workmen, contributing thus to an increase in production in every field.

With all this, it is an old conviction of mine that so rapid an industrial development represents a fearful danger to civilization and that the only true and permanent wealth of a nation is that which derives from the earth, the soil. No matter how much goods and how much wealth industrialists and workmen produce, they are goods and wealth in a large measure fictitious, and answer conventional, not indispensable needs.

The truth of this theory was seen during the war and again is seen now during the crisis; in all difficult periods statesmen and mere citizens must beat their heads against the physiocratic theory: true riches come from the earth.

Because of this old and profound theory of mine, from the moment in which I assumed the reigns of government and during these eight years I have done everything possible for the encouragement of agriculture in Italy. One of the measures taken in this regard was precisely that which I took in 1926 under the name "The Battle of Wheat or Corn," which I continued enlarging. Italy, with only three-fifths of her territory cultivatable, is about to reach that sufficiency of home-produced grain that will render her independent of importations from abroad. Our production now suffices for four-fifths of the national demand. Within a few years, the efforts toward the spreading of agriculture by machine will be crowned by the realization of the dream of a production sufficient for every Italian to have bread produced by his fatherland.

The facilitation of internal migration, such as from continental Italy to Sardinia and Sicily, and permanent migration from Italy to our colonies also form part of these same provisions.

Italy, as her history shows, has been and is inhabited by a highly dynamic people. Her civilization's influence has been felt in every corner of the globe. She has entered this post-war period with a territory slightly more extensive than that she occupied before the war. Facism has animated her with a greater desire for development.

We are not displeased that our people cannot emigrate, that frontiers and gates are barred against us. With a new will we are demanding of our land its all, our land that in history's centuries of time has been the home of the Italian race. But we are directed toward expansion, and, as we believe in that destiny for us, we believe that the true source of wealth is in the earth.

The development of our peninsula proceeds with a lively enthusiasm, and, looking toward the future of our African colonies we have faith that before many years have passed part of our population will find satisfactory systematization in Libya's fertile fields that already have demonstrated noteworthy possibilities for development.

The Italians have been pioneers in many lands possessed by others; with better reason they will be such in lands under the dominion of the fatherland. The need of the great nations and great peoples today of having colonies is nothing but a new form of the ancient eternal need that drove the peoples of olden times to migration.

New York's Vanity... Mayor Jimmy Walker's Modest Home...The Pent House Fad Passing

Marilyn Miller Jokes and Broadway Reports Her Engaged to Five

DULL THOUGHTS of a dullard:

George Jean Nathan's favorite restaurant is The Colony. My impression is the New Yorker's favorite restaurant is where the head waiter bows lowest.

When I pass the modest brick home of Jimmy Walker in quiet St. Luke's place, the home to which he has clung through all his honors, I somehow cannot think he is as bad as painted.

I still think "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" is, if not the best from a dramaturgic viewpoint, the most enjoyable play of the year.

Some one tells me Edna St. Vincent Millay has "moods" and will go away completely to herself for several days. Such seclusion is excellent for anyone, but only poets seem able to do it.

No one for years seemed to think of the name The New Yorker, but in the past few years there came a magazine, a hotel, a restaurant and an express train by that name.

An architect tells me the pent house was a fad and is already losing its living appeal. Scores are untenanted.

A melodramatic mystery play is almost certain to have at least a five week run in New York, no matter how bad. There are that many people who will go to every mystery play presented just for the fun of guessing at the solution.

Tammany Hall is America's oldest political organization—matured when the Republican and Democratic parties were born. The fact that it survives is a tribute to the lack of civic consciousness of the people.

Marilyn Miller has been publicly reported as about to marry five different young men in as many months. She jokingly calls boy friends endearing names in public, and thus the rumors grow. No small town loves rumors like Broadway.

A man who has owed me $50 for six years recently paid it and speaks to me again. He hadn't spoken during all the six years, which is why many of us refuse loans.

NEW YORK forgets more quickly than almost any other city. Big Tim Sullivan was an example. In his day he was one of the best known men in town. Yet when he died he remained for five days a nameless body at the morgue. His identification was purely by accident. He might have gone to the potter's field.

ROARK BRADFORD, who was largely responsible for Marc Connolly's successful play, "The Green Pastures," saw the New York production of the play for the first time several weeks ago. Bradford is a modest gentleman who came to town quietly, went to the theater inconspicuously, and otherwise conducted himself becomingly. He lives in New Orleans, where he picked up much of the material for his masterful studies of the Negro.

I THINK the best line in "The Green Pastures" is where the modern decadence is being deplored. Some one observes: "People these days just use Sunday to get over Saturday night."

WILL ROGERS

The Big Trouble of the Movies Is Making Pictures That Will Live Up to Their Titles

Will Says We'll Live Through This, But to Make the Most of It Now

ALL I KNOW is just what I read in the Moving Picture adds, and say Boy what an education it is! I thought the underwear adds in the magazines were about the limit in presenting an eyefull, but these Movie adds give you the same thing without the underwear.

Even I myself appeared in a Nightgown in the Connecticut Yankee, so on the billboards it would add a touch of romantic glamor, to say nothing of a smattering of sex appeal.

Mind you you musent let the add have anything to do with what you see on the insides. You are liable to see the wildest stuff facing you on the billboards, and then go inside and everybody is dressed as Esquimos all through the picture. In other words Will Hays big trouble is getting pictures that will live up to the pictures on the adds.

YOU KNOW in all Latin American Countries (I am speaking of authority as I flew over them at an altitude of sometimes as low as ten thousand feet) in those Countries, if you put a picture on the boards to advertise what you are having inside or if in your wording you say that Miss Millie De Hokum will entirely disrobe on a tight wire, why on the said night Millie better do a mighty good job of stripping or the cash customers will clothe Millie and her management with some seats and chairs, and any other handy article laying around.

Or if it shows a picture of a bull fight and a Matador being gored, by an unruly Ox, why the day of the fight, you better have the man gored, or be prepared to be gored yourself. In other words you got to deliver what you advertise.

The big problem of the Movies now is to deliver up to what the Lithograph makers and the ad writers have shown on the outside. In other words that branch of the Industry has "Outstripped" the Production end. We just can't seem to get 'em as wild as they show 'em on the outside. We got to get wilder people. A lot of these have been out here for years, and they are getting kinder old and tame. There is an awful lot of us out here that just can't arouse our public like we ought to. And that's why we keep trying to get new blood into this ART.

THEN IN THE TITLES of Pictures, there is where its getting hard. They just cant think up enough suggestive Titles to go around. They bring every big Writer out here from New York and England and have them in an Office just thinking all the time on Titles that will lead you to expect you are going to see on the inside about four of the most prominent Commandments broken, right before your eyes. But there is just so many of those Titles, and every Company is fighting to get 'em.

You take old lays like the "Old Homestead." Now they are just waiting till they can think up some title for that, and then it will go into Production.

A few of the best that have been turned in by the highest priced Writers up to now is "The Old Love Nest," "Home in Name Only," "The Birthplace of Folly," "Devilment Galore Among the Honeysuckles," "What Took Place Under the Old Roof," "The Gal Pays the Mortgage With Body and Soul," "The House Is Old But the Carryings on Is New and Spicy," "The Gangsters Birthplace as Far as We Know."

So you can see that they are right on the edge of getting something that will combine all these, and give you an inkling of what the old roof has seen take place under it, and then they will start in making it.

THE WORD "Hell" while generally frowned upon as conversation in the grammar grades, has been literally pounced upon by the Movie Title manufacturers, and they have just about "Hell'ed" everything to death. They have pictured the Doorway, the stage Entrance, and every part of Hell, till Hell has just got so it dont mean nothing anymore but another word in a title. Putting the word Hell on the billboards and expecting to scare up any excitement among the prospective victims any more is just blowed up.

Course my old friend Will Hays still insists that Virtue triumphs, but they keep making you more and more doubtful right up to the end, in fact most of them hold it back till after the finale fade out. And I have seen some of em here lately where it looked like it was still in doubt as to whether it triumphed or not.

Thats called "Subtelry." All the Writers try to be what they call "Sophisticated" or "Subtelry." That means nobody knows what you are talking about and dont give a D——. Sophistication means talking all day about nothing. You are both bored but you have to do something till somebody mixes another cocktail, we are getting a lot of those kind of Talking plays now.

Titles that if printed on the old silent screen, would have got the "Rawsberry" now are considered smart, for they apply to nothing and mean less.

I saw one the other night called "Kiss and Leave Each Other Flat." It was so subtle that it dident say whether you can leave em flat physically, or financially. They call em drawing room plays, women with nothing on their minds eat em up, kids hiss em, and old men sleep right through em. They had em on the stage till they ruined it. So between "Subtelry" and Gangsters we have run the old Cowboy trying to save the sheriffs daughter, right back to the dairy farm.

No modern child would want to learn how to shoot a 45 Colts. He wants to know how to mow em down with the old Browning Machine Gun. But we will live through it, and come out with something worse. We always do. So we better make the most of this while its here.

The Stage and The Footlight Stars

MUSICAL

NINA OLIVETTE has a prominent part in "Let's Go Collegiate," the new stage presentation in the Penn Theater.

Ladies Will Weep Over Norma's Woes As Flirt in Alvin

By GEORGE SEIBEL

HELEN HAYES' greatest success, the play that was the reigning sensation of the 1927-28 season, will be revived in the Alvin Theater this week by George Sharp to give his new leading lady, Gladys George, an opportunity to portray a southern flirt and show the difference between Virginia and Honolulu. Norma Besant, the heroine of "Coquette," is different from Luana chiefly in the color of her skin—under which they are sisters, as a certain Mr. Kipling has sagely observed.

"Coquette" is one of those plays that are born on the stage. George Abbott, director of "Broadway," and part author, wrote the drama in collaboration with Ann Preston Bridgers, who was playing in "Dulcy" at the time. Both of them were theater folks who knew the tricks of the trade. Yet "Coquette" is a play that has comparatively few tricks. It is one of those opportunities for the gentler half of the audience to dab their lace-embroidered hankies to their tear-dimmed eyes.

Norma, the heroine, is a plain, every-day and seven-days-in-the-week flirt. Her father is a gentleman of the Old South. When Norma gets involved in an affair with Michael, this stern old father behaves as all stern old fathers do in plays. Being southern, he even goes one step further and shoots Michael.

The Modern Touch

This killing and the subsequent trial in which Norma has to testify against her father or against her lover is trite theatrical stuff. Scribe and Sardou used it until it was threadbare and shiny. But the modern touch comes in the dialogue, which has many a capital D in it.

But there is plenty of old-fashioned sentiment in the drama. At the end of the first act, when Norma comes very close to Michael, he says:

"I'm not going to kiss you, Norma. I've seen all those others doing it. I'll kiss you when I come back to marry you. That will be worth waiting for. Good-bye."

Then he goes out through the window and leaves the audience wondering if any such heroic Galahad ever really lived.

Up to Paul McGrath

It's up to Paul McGrath to prove it. The role was originally played by Elliott Cabot, who looked rather too sleek and clean to be the "trash" he was called. Robert Fiske, Alice Ann Baker, Edward Sullivan and Hugh Banks are entrusted with the other leading parts.

But, of course, the burden of the play rests upon Norma and Miss George. She did such fine work in "The Bird of Paradise" that she may be expected to give a noble account of herself in "Coquette." So the ladies should not forget their mouchoirs, for they will be needed.

New Pittsburgh Play

This week will also see the premiere of a new play by a Pittsburgh author at the Little Theater of Carnegie Tech. The drama is by Elizabeth Moorhead, made from her novel, "Answer Before Dark." That novel seemed to cry for dramatic adaptation, having all the big situations filled with incandescent emotions that the dramatist yearns for and the actor can "get his teeth into." Mrs. Vermorcken got into the list of best sellers with her first Pittsburgh novel, "Clouded Hills," and if this drama, made from her second book, is adeptly constructed and played with punch she may land on Broadway next.

"Answer Before Dark" has its scene laid in Pittsburgh, with some incidents happening in Paris. Will there be a scenic reproduction of that unfrequented alcove in the Carnegie Museum where the lovers have their tryst to talk over the precious past?

'Rhapsody in Black' Gets Divided Verdict and May Have to Be Made Over

By GILBERT W. GABRIEL

Universal Service Drama Critic.

NEW YORK, May 16.

THE THINGS THAT the New York theater customarily does in that mild time between Easter and mid-May the theater of 1930-31 has now done.

The fly-by-night farces, the mealy little comedies flavored with a pleasant but somehow fatal amateurishness, the glum superart drama which for some strange reason somebody always tries to dig up out of the Russian to produce on the stickiest evening of the spring—they've all come, most of them are gone, and the time is ripe for a few wistful farewells.

Doubtless two or three of this season's heartiest successes will manage to shed their winter woolens and stay aboard Broadway well into July without suffering either blight or bankruptcy or prickly heat.

Old Town Won't Die

The usual lot of summer revues are coming in soon, too, in all the glory of their satires, songs and scanties. The town won't die.

Lew Leslie, of "Blackbirds" and "International Revue" fame, brings in the first of these hot-weather shows. It is out of Harlem by an all-Negro cast. It is eminently humorless, and therefore is supposed to be an innovation. Opinion is much divided about it. What with my own quaint longing for an occasional laugh at just something, or anything, in the course of a revue an evening long, I found it a darksome disappointment, full of rue and makeshift, and no fun at all.

Still, Mr. Leslie may make his "Rhapsody in Black"—that is the name of it—over into a sizzling gayety before it is through. Mr. Leslie has a habit of doing that thing.

Last Nights Count

First-nights evidently do not matter to him half so much as last nights. He brings in his pieces in a state of blissful hodge-podge, takes it blithely on the chin, and then goes ahead and makes good shows of them.

So he did with his "Blackbirds." So he almost did it with his fabulously elaborate "International Revue," one of the longest, loosest vaudevilles ever to cross the midnight line in New York. Maybe, then, so he'll do with his "Rhapsody in Black."

Forgive my maybe.

"Crazy Quilt," which is such an entirely new edition of "Sweet and Low" that it warrants a new name, too, opens this week.

New "Follies" in June

Coming soon are "The Band Wagon" and "The Third Little Show." And, with June, the new "Follies" and the new "Scandals." Broadway may starve for bread, but it will have plenty of iced cake—and will eat it, and like it, too.

The Pulitzer prize play, Susan Glaspell's "Alison's House," has moved uptown from the earnest haunts of the Civic Repertory to the Ritz Theater. This will be a post-seasonal feather in the beret of Miss Le Gallienne, the director, and it will help to toss laurel wreaths after her in her departure, pro

Night of One-Act Plays By Pittsburgh Authors

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

SEVERAL WEEKS AGO groups of amateur players presented a series of 15 one-act plays in four nights in the annual contest fostered by the Drama League of Pittsburgh. The plays were staged in the Theresa L. Kaufmann Theater of the Irene Kaufmann Settlement, a fine "little theater."

More recently, in another little theater, the Y Playhouse of the Y. M. & W. H. A., the playing group of that theater presented Ibsen's "Ghosts," and just last week the Pitt Players, dramatic organization of the University of Pittsburgh, played Barrie's "Alice Sit-By-The-Fire" on the same stage. Throughout the winter, at various times, there have been public presentations of important plays by Tech drama students in their own little theater.

Work Is Significant

These things are more deeply significant to me probably than to some of the readers of this department. Of similar significance is another night in the little theater that comes this week. This is to be Tuesday evening, when three one-act plays, written by Pittsburgh authors, will be acted by playing groups of the Irene Kaufmann Settlement in their own theater.

One of the plays, "The Angel of the Lord," an allegory of the strife between capital and the masses, emanated from the brain of our own George Seibel, whose critiques and articles about plays and players are familiar to readers of this department of the Sun-Telegraph. Mr. Seibel is no novice at the playwriting trade. Also on the program are "The Waiting Room," by George M. P. Baird, and "The Pleasure Hunt," by Robert E. Wood. Mr. Wood is a reformed newspaper man, former member of the Sun-Telegraph staff.

Everybody Stretch!

Somewhere above the word "significant" was used. The proud papas of three dramatic brain children perhaps swell their chests a little now as it is recalled. Perhaps, too, the members of the playing groups grow a little chesty. Maybe the word puffs the technical staff, headed by Louis Isaacs, director, and including Alexander Schulman, assistant director; J. Barry Feinstein, technician; John L. Taylor, Henry Goldman, Dorothy Maretsky, Meyer Gerskin and Arthur Slifkin. Also, there are Harry Ratner, business manager, and Walter Framer, in charge of publicity, who may argue that be[illegible]ce result is what counts [illegible]ey are responsible fo[illegible]ever that may be.

Well—give them due credit—they are all doing something that I believe is to have a beneficial effect on the future of the theater. They are helping to recreate a dramatic audience for the big theater. The effect will be felt in future years in attendance at productions of the living stage.

For some years the trend has been away from the stage and toward the screen. Before the advent of the movie it was the delight of many a youngster to provide himself with a nickle's worth of peanuts, and, for a

I certainly thought someone in Baltimore, Md., looked upon me as a hard-boiled egg. By registered mail I received a wooden egg with no explanation. Yesterday a letter came from Isaac Twamley, who signs himself "Eighty-Two Years Young." He says when Ruth Chatterton was 5 years old he took an egg out of her ear during one of his exhibitions and that this is the very self-same egg. He asked me to give it to Ruth and to say how interested he has been in her all these years. I am relieved to know that he wasn't handing me any round-about slams. I will have to give to Ruth the egg as soon as I have time to write and explain to her it is a memento of her childhood. The old man says he is the oldest conjurer in the world presenting magic of long ago.

Visitors, with the exception of Robert Bow and Rex Bell, are absolutely forbidden Clara Bow. Her father is only permitted to see her twice a week and the time he spends with her is limited. She is a very sick girl and her doctors have absolutely forbidden any mention of work. Rest and quiet are what she needs and, when we consider what she has endured the last year, we cannot wonder that she is in such a state of collapse. William Bow, a cousin of Clara, has been taken under the management of Robert Bow and will be exploited in pictures. He is a fine looking lad.

Two new houses of interest are being built at Santa Monica. One belongs to Harold Lloyd and one to Samuel Goldwyn. Harold is almost entirely well. Every morning he exercises on his own green, golfing, and every afternoon he goes down to the beach to supervise the building of his own beach house, which is almost next door to Marion Davies' colonial house. The beach place is primarily built for his youngsters, to give them the ocean breezes, but it is only a simple affair and not like his magnificent mansion in Beverly Hills.

Corinne Griffith is a business woman. She owns two houses, a beautiful home in Beverly Hills and a very comfortable house at Malibu Beach. She and her husband, Walter Morosco, decided they wanted to spend six months or more in Europe, so she rented the Beverly Hills house to Ed Nolan, vice president of the Bank of America, and her Malibu Beach house to Constance Bennett. Now she hasn't a care in the world, so she and Walter are leaving for London May 20.

"We are going to London first," said Corinne, "because, once we get to Paris we are never able to tear ourselves away."

WHAT WITH "Whoopee Cruises" taking folk down the Gulf Stream over week-ends, and weather warm enough to send the stay-at-homes into the parks and suburbs, the public didn't do especially well by our box-office nell during the past week.

Under the circumstances it's pleasant to give a hand to Tiffany Productions, whose picture, "Hell Bound," starring Leo Carillo, lopped the loop at the Paramount for a full $72,000. Personal appearance of Amos 'n' Andy helped, but the Tiffany gem did nicely on its own before bowing out for "Up Pops the Devil" and Buddy Rogers in person.

About $70,000 clinked into the Roxy coffers while "Young Sinners" held the screen. The new attraction there is "Six-Cylinder Love." In its second week "The

The Screen and Its Players

Familiar Faces Best Bet For Studio Success, Says Studio General Manager

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS,
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, May 16.

"KEEP THE OLD familiar faces on the screen," urges Charles Rogers, "and stop concentrating on new talent."

This, says the young man who sits in judgment on pictures for Ann Harding, Pola Negri and Helen Twelvetrees, is important.

"If producers would use the same effort and intelligence in keeping old favorites before the public that they do in trying to find new faces, stars would not wane so quickly.

"For years we have blamed the fickle public," Mr. Rogers declared. "It isn't the public, it is the producers who are playing the old army game of passing the buck from one to another when they ascribe the fall of a popular favorite to the inconstancy of the public."

Effect on Stars Bad

This attitude of the producers has had a bad effect on some of the stars. Mr. Rogers, whose official title is general manager of RKO-Pathe, says of these stars:

"They often say to themselves, 'I'll be here today and gone tomorrow, so I'll get mine while I can.' Naturally such a state of mind reflects on their work.

"I do not mean to say that all actors and actresses make pictures with this idea in the back of their heads. But, since so many newcomers are given the best stories and the widest exploitation, you cannot blame the old favorites for resenting the injustice of the producers."

Far Fields Green

Charles Rogers' frank statement is merely an echo of what I have often said in these columns. Producers overlook the talent here in Hollywood. I have known many able actors and actresses who haven't been able to get a job while some stranger unknown to the film fans has been widely exploited.

I am inclined to agree with Mr. Rogers that the producers in saying that certain of the stars are no longer popular, are speaking for themselves. The motion picture public, I have found in the years I have been writing on film topics, is tremendously loyal to its favorites. Producers are to blame for dethroning many of the stars who could have continued had they been given the right stories.

Bad Stories Fatal

Bad judgment in management and stories are to blame in nine-tenths of the cases where famous stars have suddenly found themselves unable to get a job. Take Corinne Griffith, Colleen Moore, Alice White and scores of others. Had they been given the right stories they would, today, be sailing along on the crest of the wave.

You cannot tell me a girl as popular as Colleen Moore can die overnight. You cannot tell me there is no place for Corinne Griffith or Alice White. I know my movies too well.

In citing examples of stars to whom the public is loyal Mr. Rogers calls attention to Constance Bennett.

"Miss Bennett," he says, "was a headliner when she left the screen to get married. She returned to the public more than two years ago and look what has happened to her. Today she

The farce is being produced on the same lot on which Miss La Plante made her screen debut about seven years ago. Miss Pringle Never Gets Roles She Really Wants

By MARQUIS BUSBY

HOLLYWOOD, May 16.

AILEEN PRINGLE is the sad, sad case of the girl who never got to do what she wanted to do in motion pictures.

A charming, sophisticated woman of the world, she arrived in Hollywood before they knew what to do with charming, sophisticated women of the world.

A sophisticated lady, in those days, wore naughty negligees and made it tough for the baby-faced heroine. Today the greatest successes of filmland are these charming women of the world, Norma Shearer, Ina Claire and Ruth Chatterton. Aileen could do it, too, but pioneers are never appreciated for at least 100 years. By that time it doesn't make much difference to the pioneers.

Charms Still Hidden

No role has yet given Aileen the opportunity to display the charm which has made her a favorite in the Hollywood social colony or which inspired eminent authors to break into raves about her in the public prints. She made her first appearance in "Three Weeks," that memorable epic of tiger-skin rugs and lush love. It wasn't what she wanted to do.

After that, she co-starred with Lew Cody in a series of farces. And that wasn't what she wanted to do. By the time the little talking gadget was discovered, Aileen had been established as a very clever "other woman" in motion picture plots.

Has Many Friends

Her cultured voice, her society background and her beauty have won her many friends in private life. They have not won for her the roles for which she is adapted and for which she longs. Just another case of being famous before Hollywood discovered the drawing room.

However, if Aileen can't achieve the desired career on the screen, she has made a new career off the screen by becoming a blonde. As easy as that. She says she is a new Aileen Pringle. She is gayer, she is happier. The change in hair even brought about a change in literary tastes, furniture and mood.

That's quite a change, but it is her story, and she likes it.

MARIAN MARSH plays the role of Trilby in "Svengali," starring John Barrymore, which will be seen on the Warner screen for its second week.

Miss Evans Given Lead

As soon as she arrives at the coast from Philadelphia, where she is now playing in the principal ingenue role of George Kelly's play, "Philip Goes Forth," Madge Evans will be assigned the feminine lead in Ramon Novarro's "The Son of the Rajah." This is an original screen story adapted by Ernest Vajda and will be directed by Jacques Feyder. The only other selections for the cast to date are Conrad Nagel and C. Aubrey Smith. Miss Evans was a prominent child actress not many years ago and was recently signed to a long-term screen contract.

Home Town Gets Break in Current Talk Screen Bill

By MILDRED FILLMORE

TWO FORMER Pittsburghers are prominent in the new film lineup. They are Thomas Meighan, who used to be a big name in the silents and who apparently is on his way to a comeback on the talking screen, and Hardie Albright, who once studied dramatics at Carnegie Tech. Both are in "Young Sinners," the current picture in the Stanley.

Another star of the silents who has come back in the talkies in that big way is Harry Carey. He is now appearing in the Penn in "Trader Horn," the jungle picture which first came to town as a road show production. At that time it won a lot of favorable praise from the critics. Edwina Booth and Duncan Renaldo have the principal supporting roles.

Other current film attractions are "Tarnished Lady," with Clive Brook and Tallulah Bankhead, in the Fulton and Sheridan Square; "Three Girls Lost," with Loretta Young, Joyce Compton and Joan Marsh, in the Enright; "Quick Millions," with Spencer Tracy and Marguerite Churchill, in the Aldine, and Norma Shearer's "Strangers May Kiss," in the Harris.

Pictures Held Over

"Seed," based on Charles G. Norris' novel, has been moved from the Stanley to the Davis screen. It features Genevieve Tobin, John Boles and Lois Wilson. John Barrymore's "Svengali" is now on a second week in the Warner.

The story of "Young Sinners" concerns a millionaire's young son, who sets out to live his own life. He defies tradition, common sense and everything, and what happens then is what makes up the drama.

"Tarnished Lady" arouses additional interest because it marks the film debut of Miss Bankhead, who is an American actress with a London-made reputation. The film is society drama and has to do with a wife, who, after three months of married life, finds she can't continue in her wifely role. Naturally, this leads to those well known complications. Donald Ogden Stewart wrote the story.

Three Country Girls

"Three Lost Girls" involves three country maids who seek romance in the great big city. One is a born gold-digger, the other is the personification of innocence and the third escaped description in the publicity reports, so you'll have to wait until you see the film before you can catalogue her. Lew Cody and John Wayne are two of the gentlemen in this film and the three ladies were

Scouts Go to Watch Girl; Switch to Wynne Gibson

HOLLYWOOD, May 16.

A FEW YEARS ago I accompanied a theatrical producer to a show called "June Love." One of the principals, explained the producer, was reported to be a great "find" and he wanted to see if she would do for his forthcoming production. We sat through the first act.

"What do you think of her?" he asked.

"Why—er," I stammered, "to be truthful, I didn't watch the principals. That little girl in the green sweater, second from the end, has been holding my eye ever since we came in."

"She's got me, too," he confessed. "Never mind the principal—here's where we create a new one."

Wynne Gibson left the chorus that week. The little girl, "second

Play Award Not Cheered

By BUSHNELL DIMOND

NEW YORK, May 16.

THIS IS ALWAYS the time of year when the critical grouch attains full flower. Theatrical factors that, in the stress of winter openings, would rate a smile or a shrug, now cause low growls and harsh grimaces. Nothing perfectly suits the writing brotherhood. The molehills of demerit are elevated to mountains of contumely.

Just now everyone owning a typewriter is taking a crack at the Pulitzer Prize award. As you have read, this was handed out by the three sage judges to Susan Glaspell's "Alison House," as floridly performed by Miss Le Gallienne and her too-eager troupe in Fourteenth street. With the close of the repertory season, the production has been given an uptown ride by Lee Shubert.

Alternatives Here

It is now available in the Ritz Theater, and high-minded souls who enjoyed this post-mortem on the career of the poetess, Emily Dickinson, may see it all over again. Those who prefer their dramatic draught a little headier can spend the evening at "The Wonder Bar" or Lew Leslie's "Rhapsody in Black."

Over the latter entertainment, a midget storm has also arisen. Old-timers, acquainted with the adolescent years of Edna Wallace Hopper, deplore the "Rhapsody" as too new-fangled. The modernists hail it as "different" and "provocative." Actually it is a rather solemn revue, in which the lacquered gifts of Miss Ethel Waters are dimmed to a charcoal gray. There is much gorgeous choral singing, not much

Orchestra Of Boston Is to Tour

By J. FRED LISSFELT

Announcement that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to tour again next season, and that we are to hear it again in Pittsburgh, together with the receipt of a most interesting volume, a 50-year history of that excellent organization, gives grounds for comparison between the ups and downs of the Boston players and of our own budding orchestra.

Boston was lucky from the very first. Col. Henry H. Higginson as a young man had the ideal urge to go away from business and home, and in that most charming capital of all the world, Vienna, in his most impressionable years, to drink in the musical culture of that city.

As an Apprentice

He went as an apprentice, not as a dilletante, and when his body refused to acquiesce to the trying demands made upon it as a practicing artist, his mind had already learned the fundamentals which were to become the guiding principles of his orchestra.

In Boston, Col. Higginson was again to become a successful financier. He was too well aware of the financial difficulties of founding an orchestra, and so he made certain that his bank book would take care of his ideals. And when his bank book showed him the way, he spent lavishly, but never recklessly, and gave Boston and the world a great orchestra.

Because he could be the czar, the orchestra was always a stable organization. But his regency was noble. Col. Higginson chose his players and his conductors out of a knowledge of men and artists that was deep-rooted and substantial.

Critics Ignored

Because he paid the bill, he could afford to ignore criticism against his regard for the union, society, the foreign musician, new music, and many petty matters that keep any musical organization always near shipwreck. He brought to Boston such men as Paur, Nikisch and Muck, and was loyal to all, for which, in war time, his patriotism was questioned.

The story of the first years of this orchestra reads like the life story of our own. They were years of weeding and preparing the soil for its more luxuriant years. They were years of experiment, of training of childish audiences. Each director brought new character to the ensemble, but in its first decade the Boston players had indeed established their personality.

Lesson of Folly

The war years tell a lesson of folly such as we dislike in our saner moments to recall. Even in Pittsburgh we saw enough of that stupidity when we hated German music, but listened to it with delight when offered in the same phrasing but in absurdly translated titles. And then the rebirth, with Koussevitsky, whose triumphant success has placed his orchestra among the world's best, gives us courage to think that we might, too, some day boast of such an institution.

Our orchestra is making headway. We have had no such "angel" as Col. Higginson to lead the way with so sure a hand. But we do have far-seeing men and women whose spirit is still fighting and clearing the way for success of our own players. Surely our public can no longer be blind to their endeavors. Now is the time to say a word of approval, and to lend a hand.

News and Comment About Events on Stage and Screen

Familiar Faces Best Bet For Studio Success, Says Studio General Manager is one of the most popular stars on the screen.

"Pola Negri has just returned to America after an absence of three years. Letters by the thousands have poured in upon her, many of them expressing joy at her return and pledging their loyalty.

"Take Norma Shearer. She is an example of a long-ruling favorite. Marion Davies is one of the stars who has kept her place in the public's heart through change and counter-change. Momentary sensations have come and gone, but she goes serenely on, winning new laurels.

"Richard Barthelmess is one of the pioneers and today he is more popular than he was five years ago. Marie Dressler has been a favorite ever since 'Tillie's Punctured Romance.' Her present popularity is greater than it was at that time because she has never cheated the public with a haphazard performance.

"Look at the way the film public has always stood by Clara Bow in the face of trouble such as seldom comes to any actress. Illness kept Lew Cody away from the screen a long time. When he recovered Lew attempted a comeback and got the thrill of his life. The 'fickle' public demonstrated in unmistakable fashion how glad it was to have him back."

Mr. Rodgers goes on to say there will always be room for promising newcomers.

"Natural causes deplete the ranks of the established players and some of the old players do not have the ability to match that of the newcomers. But, vehicles and exploitation being equal, I will back the established favorites outdrawing the new faces every time."

Secret Six" brought $60,000 to the Capitol.

The present week looks like a record breaker for the Mai Bowes playhouse with Marion Davies Cosmopolitan production, "It's a Wise Child," and a stage revue listing George Jessel, Helen Kane and Vincent Lopex among the entertainers. The line at Friday's opening continues.

Among the long-term tenants, "Trader Horn" enters its sixteenth week. "Two Hearts in Waltz Time" is in its thirty-third, and "Tabu," with 11 weeks, is third for long run honors.

"Svengali," the John Barrymore film, has had a successor selected in "Chances." No definite date is set and the "Trilby" story goes into a third week at the Hollywood after about $45,000 total for the first and second. The premiere of the new Chevalier picture, "The Smiling Lieutenant," is set for May 22.

Theater Is Leased

UFA, the German producers, have leased the fine Cosmopolitan Theater, facing the park on Columbus Circle, for the showing of Teutonic talkies. The first picture to play will be an Emil Jannings starring vehicle titled "Der Grosse Tenor." The premiere will be about three weeks hence.

The talk of the town is Reri, the South Sea charmer, who stepped from "Tabu" into the new "Follies" cast. She's a very modern miss indeed, and has made a hit with the local boys. Gals—not so much. Pearl Osgood has signed for the new Zeigfeld production, which is rehearsing daily.

Hal Phyffe, star-shooter, has migrated Hollywood-ways under an exclusive agreement with Fox to photograph their players.

Gilda Gray got a great send-off when she left town to keep a Publix date in New Haven. She'll be back to play the Paramount. Leo Carillo received lots of kind words for "Hell Bound," and expressed appreciation in person. Pat O'Brien's back renewing stage acquaintances before beginning work Monday with Nancy Carroll in "Personal Maid." Raymond Guion's in it, too. He'll be Guy Raymond for films.

Mary Pickford Sails

Mary Pickford sailed for Europe, Noel Coward and Gertrude Lawrence waving their adieux. Richard Bennett writes east comparing his salary with Joan's and Connie's. Mae Murray has left for home and Hollywood. Harry Cohn and Eddie Buzzell breezed in like a breath of Hollywood.

Looks like Lewis Milestone will return for an "All Quiet" sequel. The Hearst Metrotone News scoop of the "Two Gun" Crowley capture on the West End avenue front, was a Broadway sensation—a real gangster picture on the screen within a few hours after the thrilling gun battle and "Siege of Ninetieth Street."

Glenn Hunter has replaced Dennis King in the stage show, "Peter Ibbetson." Madge Kennedy has followed Gertie Lawrence in "Private Lives." Ernst Lubitsch got a kick out of playing the piano via radio. Fifi Dorsay's booked for RKO vaude.

MARION DAVIES will be seen next on the Aldine screen in "It's a Wise Child," a comedy.

ron" and put his stock from below par to many points above par? Richard has two more pictures for Radio. Then what will happen? Honestly, I don't know, but I am told he has been talking to some people with a bankroll who want to finance him in making his own pictures. I don't know how it will come out, but Richard, beware, beware, now that you are back after having had such a struggle.

Neither Warner Brothers nor Paramount will have any difficulty in casting their Reno pictures. Nearly everyone I know who is planning a holiday chooses Reno just to see what it is all like. Agua Caliente, we are told, has nothing on this American resort. There is wide open gambling, there are all sorts of night clubs and an atmosphere that suggests that Old West in the days that have been so glorified in fiction. I suppose there will be a battle to see whether Warner Brothers or Paramount completes their picture first. At any rate, the players ought to get some fun out of it.

West View Park Offers Concerts

Danny Nirella's band will be in West View Park again this Sunday afternoon and evening, giving four concerts. Russell Smith, singing banjoist; Frank Zursi, vocalist, and William Zoffer, singing trombonist, will be heard also. All is set for the opening of the picnic season a week from Monday. Jack Peck and his orchestra will play in the ballroom for the dance next Saturday night and will remain throughout the following week. Director Pasetti's Amerita band will give the concerts next Sunday afternoon and evening. Madam Banard's Animal Circus will be the free attraction the week of May 25.

dime, obtain a seat in the gallery of some theater. Many youngsters of corresponding age of the present day never saw the interior of a theater in which actors appear in the flesh. Many persons up to 20 years of age never have done so.

The "road" and the one-night stand have about disappeared because of the diminishing audience of the legitimate theater. But the drama of life has not died. Its audience is being reborn. The amateur players mentioned in the introduction of this article are helping nourish it, to re-establish it. The numerous groups of Pittsburgh, only a few of which have been named here, are but part of the thousands throughout the United States.

They did not come into being without a cause. That cause is the hunger of the people. Drama that approximated the dimensions of nature, expressed in terms of living action was required by fasting souls.

And so the little theater. The "significant" little theater. Significant because it is rearing a youthful audience for the big theater. The big theater, where there may be higher art but where there certainly is less earnestness. The big theater which will be saved—if it shall be saved—by the dozens of little theaters here and the thousands of little theaters elsewhere. Saved because the little theater is creating new enthusiasm for living drama.

If you never have seen the little theater in active operation—and it is well worth seeing—you can spend a profitable evening next Tuesday at the Theresa L. Kaufmann Theater. A most novel evening. An evening of plays by Pittsburgh authors, enlivened by groups of Pittsburgh actors.

scenery, and dancing that you will throb to and envy.

As an instance of the thesis stated above, on the opening night "Eli Eli," which Miss Belle Baker and others have been doing for decades in vaudeville, was hissed on the score that it is a sacred piece and the exclusive property of the synagogues. The hissers, they say, were Britons, which gives you a rough notion of the confused state in which the season finds itself.

People who have exhausted their capacity for disliking "The House Beautiful" are slightly annoyed that Noel Coward, the author, and Miss Gertrude Lawrence have left "Private Lives" flat, with Otto Kruger and Miss Madge Kennedy as refills. This, too, is puzzling, since the elegant impudence of the farce is unimpaired, and Miss Kennedy, looking like a schoolgirl, has few if any peers as a comedienne.

Furore in Village

"Precedent," an exciting rewrite of the Mooney-Billings case, has caused a wholesome furore in Greenwich Village. Yet again there is no lack of carping from the conservatives, who declare it a slice of special pleading. There was a similar disturbance, you may recall, over "Gods of the Lightning," which deified Sacco and Vanzetti several seasons ago.

The only production that theatergoers seem to be able to get together about are the now-classic hits of the season past. So if you're contemplating a visit to Manhattan, it might be pertinent to paste in your hat the following titles: "As Husbands Go," "As You Desire Me," "Five-Star Final," "Girl Crazy," "Grand Hotel," "Melo," "Mrs. Moonlight," "Once in a Lifetime," "The Barrets of Wimpole Street," "The Green Pastures," "The Silent Witness," "Three's a Crowd," "Tomorrow and Tomorrow," "Tonight or Never," "The Vinegar Tree" and "You Said It."

In that profusion you ought to find a plum or two. And, just to prove that things are more rosy than the calamity howlers admit, there is scholarly and vivacious Gilbert and Sullivan at Erlanger's. "Pinafore" will soon succeed "The Mikado," and if the impresario has a heart, "Patience" and "Iolanthe" will follow. Meanwhile, don't bother with "Her Supporting Cast," a harmless flimsy in the "naughty" manner of 1906, on which the beauty and brains of Miss Mildred McCoy are wasted. "The Rap" can also be skipped to advantage.

from the end," who was determined to kick higher, smile more brightly than any of the others is now in pictures. Since leaving the ensemble of that musical comedy, Wynne has been featured in legitimate drama, and now reports have it that Paramount is planning to make her one of their most important stars. Ruth Chatterton, you know, leaves Paramount in fall.

The rumor doesn't excite Wynne. She has learned never to plan on vagaries. All she asks is opportunity to display her ability. Wynne, originally stamped as a comedienne, happens to be a fine dramatic actress.

The proof came with an ordinary play called "Molly Magdelene," which this Gibson girl made successful on the basis of her individual performance.

"The only thing I fear," she told me, is becoming typed as a 'tough' or strictly 'the other woman' character. Possibly I may get a role with more possibilities and then I'll make the best of it. Meanwhile, it would be silly to complain for I'm not unhappy. It is just that I want to do so many things and simply will have to be patient."

It is more than lack of patience with Wynne Gibson. It is the ambition of the girl who stood out in a chorus of more than 20 girls. Such ambition, plus a personality which attracted attention from principals to "the little girl in the green sweater," cannot help but achieve realization.

Movies Old To Howard

Leslie Howard, the latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer steal from the legitimate stage, has always had movies at heart. "The only difference before," Howard says, "is that I was running the camera and now I am before it."

Sanders Plans Summer Season

A special program will mark the opening of the summer season at Sander's Inn on Friday. Dinners and suppers will be served this season. Entertainment and dance music will be furnished by Billy Weixel and his orchestra. A miniature golf course and a golf driving range, with accommodations for over 300 persons, are other amusement features afforded patrons of the inn.

tem, from the theatrical market place.

"Alison's House," as you probably knew long ago, is a dramatization of the life of the New England poetess, Emily Dickinson. It is a finely wrought play, the best of the stage works of Miss Glaspell, and no one in his right sensibilities will be able to quarrel with the award committee which preferred it to that other all too frequently mentioned candidate for the recent prize, "Tomorrow and Tomorrow."

Meanwhile, in Madison Square they are setting out many new bushes with bright leaves. "The Green Pastures," every time you look up, is celebrating another something-hundredth anniversary. "Private Lives" and "Peter Ibbetson" have new stars in them. "The Wiser They Are" did not last half long enough, and "Fine and Dandy" not a quarter as long as we all thought it should. "In the Best of Families" has lasted much longer, and "You Said It" is still as we all said it, and the trees in Central Park have never been so burning with white and red blossoms.

So that for the arts!

named a few paragraphs back.

A truck driver with ambitions, social as well as commercial, is the principal character in "Quick Millions." He falls in love with a society deb and he goes in for kidnaping when she begins walking to the altar with a college boy. This leads to some dramatics and to a blue-sky finale. Supporting Mr. Tracy and Miss Churchill are John Wray, Sally Eilers, Robert Burns and Warner Richmond.

LaCrawford Film Title

"Complete Surrender" has been selected as final title for Joan Crawford's new starring film. This is an adaptation of Kenyon Nicholson's stage play, "The Torch Song."

Human Bullet In Kennywood

Victor Zacchini, who is shot from a cannon afternoon and evening, is the first of Kennywood Park's free outdoor attractions. In two band concerts this Sunday, Izzy Cervone will dedicate a special number to Zacchini. All amusements, including the new Flight-Tutor and the Tickler, are now available to the daily crowds. Billy Lorette, the clown cop, is another feature.

Good Morning!

Riggs and Moke, "The Crazy Pair," slipped Frank Finley a $5 bill to avoid paying a 20-cent fine but the resourceful Frank visited a corner drug store and returned with $4.80 in pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters, half dollars . . . and car checks! . . . a penalty for trying to pass the buck . . . THIRTY-SIX BOMBERS and 670 pursuit planes are to make a mock air raid over New York at 11 p. m. Friday, May 22, and Saturday, May 23, at 3 o'clock —providing radio announcers with an opportunity to describe brilliantly the most outstanding spectacle of the year.

We still rate Frederick G. Rodgers the best narrator on the air "Cecil and Sally" sketches on WCAE are refreshing . . .

Let us introduce Prof. Bill Farren, whose sport reviews serve as a model for nine other stations . . . announcers in other cities must tune in his talk at least once a week to make good on their chewing gum contract . . .

WJAS has a microphone with a handle on it for special studio broadcasts . . .

Catch one of the greatest stunts in radio Wednesday at 7:45 on WJZ-KDKA when Robert L. Ripley speaks to America from aboard the Leviathan, 300 miles off Sandy Hook.

Graham McNamee Speaking:

ANNOUNCERS CERTAINLY have it easy nowadays, compared with what it used to be in the early days of radio. What I'm thinking about specially is the old violent method of signaling between the studio and control room, when the announcer was responsible for the "balance" of his program. Talk about setting-up exercises! They weren't in it compared with an old-time announcer's signals.

When you suddenly made the two-handed gesture like an umpire signaling "safe" it meant "cut this number" or "eliminate next selection."

If you belligerently stuck up both fists, it didn't mean you were looking for a fight, but questioned "are the dual microphones turned on?" If you went into full fighting pose and began shadow boxing, it meant you were worried about the trombone.

A gentle little exercise that looked as if you were sawing off your own leg meant: "How's the cello? OK?" Or languidly twiddling your fingers before your lips might mean anything from a trumpet to a clarinet unless otherwise specified.

When the old-time announcer began pumping his arms as though playing an imaginary accordion, it meant "should the speaker or instrument now at the mike be moved nearer or farther away?" This particular signal was a menace to the life and limb of everyone in the studio when practiced by "Tiny Ruffner," the seven-foot announcer whose arms reached from one studio wall to the other.

One of the most amusing signals of all was that used to indicate "play louder" or "play softer." It looked as though you were ordering a now-forbidden beverage: a "short one" for less volume, or a "tall one" for more.

Census Shows Large Market

Though they may be discouraging to some broadcasters, showing that there are far fewer sets in use in many states than the stations in those states have been wont to claim, the radio census figures thus far released by the United States Census Bureau are considerably heartening to the radio trade.

With nearly half the states reported, the figures reveal that less than one-third of the homes in the average state have radios. In other words, they show that, far from having reached a saturation point, the market for radio receivers is still very large. Only a handful of states or communities within those states show radios in as many as one out of every two homes.

Better Service For Porto Rico

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Little Porto Rico, recently visited by President Hoover, deserves a better place in radio's scheme of things, and Theodore Roosevelt, its governor general, apparently is determined to see that she gets it. At Gov. Roosevelt's request, Walter Van Nostrand, Department of Commerce radio supervisor at Atlanta, has made an inspection of Porto Rico, the first radio inspection trip made to that island since 1913.

Maj. Van Nostrand has returned to report that the island is not getting the radio service its population and size justify. Moreover, he stated, after conferring on the subject with Charles P. Hartzell, San Juan attorney, it offers a large market.

STUDIO SNAPSHOTS

KATHLEEN STEWART

Some day the busy broadcasters around the NBC studios are going to find time for a popularity contest—only it won't be a contest. It will merely be a confirmation of an accepted fact. Kathleen Stewart is the most popular and best liked individual at 711 Fifth avenue.

Officially she's a staff accompanist. Actually she is a fine artist and her work is getting better all the time.

She has none of the mannerisms or affectations usually found in very talented people. She's just sweet and soft-voiced and the kind of person you like to talk to when things have been breaking badly.

She was born in a little house on top of the Palisades, just across the Hudson. Started taking music lessons when she was five and still studies. Spends hours every day playing for her own amusement or practicing difficult passages.

Played Bach and Mozart when she was seven years old. Made her first public appearance at a concert the same year.

Kathleen Stewart

Seven years ago she missed a train and didn't have anything to do with a couple of hours. So she dropped in at the WEAF studios and had an audition. She has been in radio ever since.

One of her biggest moments was when she was presented with Mme. Schumann-Heink in an important concert. She has been featured with Louise Homer and other "names" in radio programs. Has been accompanist to almost everyone of any important in broadcasting and particularly likes to accompany Graham McNamee, Jessica Dragonette and Devora Nadworney.

Has a strong domestic streak and is a swell cook. She brings samples of her culinary skill to the studios and strong-willed men break their diets.

Is good on ice-skates but prefers to go coasting with a bunch of kids. Good horsewoman and rides like a colonel's daughter.

Can't play jazz music. Says she just doesn't feel it or understand it. At the same time she does not dispise it and has a sincere admiration for the good jazz musicians.

Hates shopping and is bored to death with the thought of clothes. Would like to be rich enough to hire someone to be "clothes conscious" for her.

She almost gave up music for painting one time and she still likes to sketch. Was organist at the First Presbyterian Church in Palisades-on-the-Hudson for 13 years. Likes hymns.

Has made successful concert appearances in Europe but doesn't talk about them. In fact she doesn't talk about her own accomplishments at all.

She is a polo fan and is said to be one of the few women who really understand the game.

She first met Walter Damrosch when she was seven years old. He heard her play.

What will make the child a great artist, someone asked Dr. Damrosch.

"Years and years of work," he said.

And she followed his advice.

Has a bachelor of music degree and has taught music but prefers to play. She likes her job.

Dill to Review Radio in Europe

Arrangements are being made by the broadcasting networks to relay from abroad one or more speeches by United States Senator Dill, of Washington, co-author of the radio act, dealing with his observations of radio in Europe.

German Hymn Part Of 'Sacred Songs'

The singing of a German hymn, "Harre Meine Seele," will feature the Sacred Song concert on KDKA Tuesday night at 7:30. Other hymns will be "I Love to Tell the Story" and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

READY FOR AERIAL WAR

NBC ANNOUNCERS, engineers and service men testing equipment in the tri-motored monoplane they will use Friday night and Saturday afternoon to describe the Army Air Corps' raid on New York City for KDKA and WCAE.

Board Acts in Lottery Issue

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16.—Though the Federal Radio Commission has held that it is powerless to promulgate an order banning "lottery and scheme of chance" broadcasts by radio stations, it has advised all broadcasting station managers in the United States that "complaints from a substantial number of listeners against any broadcasting station presenting such programs will result in the station's application for renewal of license being set for a hearing."

The commission thus placed itself definitely on record as looking askance upon fortune telling, gift enterprises, lotteries and games of chance on the radio.

Brinkley Uses Mexican Spot

Unofficial reports received in Washington have it that Dr. John R. Brinkley, the "goat gland specialist," who lost his broadcasting license out in Kansas when the courts decided that his medical advice broadcasts were inimical to the public interest, has obtained authority to broadcast in Mexico.

He has been granted a permit to build a new 50,000-watt station at Villa Acuna, just across the Rio Grande from Del Rio, Tex., where he proposes establishing another hospital and using the radio to advertise it.

The United States government has no jurisdiction over Americans who decide to move their stations across the border.

The LOUDSPEAKER by LOUIS REID

Spreading Education

NEW YORK, May 16.—Education by radio continues to be an absorbing topic in the inner chambers of the broadcasters. Though there is no clamor on the part of listeners for educational programs the chiefs are going ahead with elaborate plans for the uplift of the parlors.

Louis Reid

A vast amount of gold is to be available, the best minds of the nation are to be utilized, and as a sort of super-coach from the sidelines there will be none other than Sir John Reith, head of the British Broadcasting Company. Sir John knows the adaptation of radio to education as probably no one else in the world knows it. He ladles out education to British listeners in large doses daily. Backed by the government, he has made them take it—and like it.

British Radio

The autocrat of British radio, however, got off to a good start. His educational campaigns were launched in the early days of broadcasting before the public had become radio-wise, before it had time to form its own preferences, or its own prejudices.

With the passing of the years concessions have had to be made. Listeners became more and more rebellious. They wrote more and more letters to the editors, to members of Parliament. More time, as a result, had to be given to programs of entertainment.

Yet, in spite of the concessions, educational programs continue to dominate British radio. They are the very basis of the whole broadcasting scheme and they are today recognized as the finest example of microphonic cultural instruction in the world. They will continue to be by virtue of the governmental interest and responsibility back of them.

A different problem is presented here. Here radio education has lagged because of the independent and commercial nature of broadcasting. The radio world, with no governmental policy to follow, promptly realized it could not make its business pay if it sought to cram education into listeners' ears. Small homeopathic doses have been administered from time to time, chiefly in those hours when they did not interfere with the diversion of the tired businessman.

THE BOOK SHELF by GEORGE SEIBEL

Dreiser Has Unveiled The Story of His Life Up to Twenty Years

"I WILL NOT say that this is a true record," Theodore Dreiser qualifies his confessions, entitled "Dawn" (published by Liveright), and so permits his readers to wonder how far his memory might become a convenient forgettery. He would merely be following the example of other famous confessors, from Augustine to Rousseau, from Rousseau to Frank Harris. Most of the time when they are baring their souls, it is pride rather than penitence, exhibitionism rather than sincerity. The greatest sinners have been the greatest liars.

George Seibel

Dreiser tells that "there were tales of spirits striding through the rooms, previous to my birth, so that my father felt obliged to send for the local priest, and have him sprinkle the house with holy water." The lustration was clearly inadequate.

After some years of vegetal existence, studying his catechism or going a-berrying with his dog Snap, Theodore began to realize that the world is a vale of grief and life a tragedy. He paints a beautiful portrait of his mother, as touching as Barrie's "Margaret Ogilvy," but this mother was a lone saint in a rather sordid desert. And her son was a looker, and he had ears—"a most curious-minded child, hanging about and listening even when I was not wanted."

It must have been the same instinct that led Balzac to follow people on the street, intent to catch scraps of their conversation.

"Hill's Manual"

To this lad's home came a book-agent selling "Hill's Manual of Etiquette and Social and Commercial Forms." Was that the original germ of Dreiser's realism, of his preoccupation with the minute details of how things were done? Hill was "a world of fascinating lore."

Theo read Gray's "Elegy" and Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," but also the woes of beautiful working girls in the "Family Story Paper" and the heroic exploits of such valiant souls as Diamond Dick and Nick Carter. Of such strands is woven the magic carpet of the literary genii.

But Life, rather than Literature, fashioned Dreiser as he is. His brother Paul, "a genial Lothario," who, "like Jack Falstaff, died unregenerate," is portrayed with liberal frankness; his sister's folly exposed with calm retrospect. The mystery of sex begins to lure and repel the boy. He fell in love with a girl who preferred a boyish dandy. And a little later another literary plunge into Longfellow, Poe, Cooper, Ouida, and even Laura Jean Libbey, prompts the most astounding of his retrospective confessions:

"I have thought that for all my modest repute as a realist, I seem, to my self-analyzing eyes, something more of a romanticist than a realist."

He Kisses Myrtle

The chapter in which he kisses Myrtle Trego during a delirious game of "Post Office" is proof of the truth in this confession. That chapter is almost a lyric.

And after sordid work in hardware stores and laundries, after adolescent struggles with haunting desires, after an escapade with a baker's daughter, after some mental bewilderment in religious fogs, his attitude toward the world and life, at the mature age of 20 where this book leaves him, shows Dreiser still the poet:

"Here the blind lead the blind, or the dreamers the dreamers, and we stand as ever in the past on the shore of the unknowable. * * * Chronically nebulous, doubting, uncertain, I stared and stared at everything, only wondering, not solving."

That is the tragedy of youth, perhaps of all youth, and Dreiser has pictured it very realistically in his very romantic book.

Ovid in Paris

A French Ovid has made a little manual for lovers in "L'Amour" (published by Dutton). Paul Geraldy overflows with amatory wisdom. "Be happy at success in love, but do not feel flattered. Victories of the sort are not great victories. Women are only too fond of being vanquished." It has all been said in the letters of Ninon de Lenclos, but maybe it's true.

BEST SELLERS IN PITTSBURGH

The following books are selling best in Pittsburgh book stores, according to lists furnished by Brentano's, J. R. Weldin Company, Jones' Book Shop, Priscilla Guthrie's Book Shop, Hays' Book Shop, Kaufmann's Book Department, Horne's Book Department, Gimbels' Book Department, Rosenbaum's Book Department and Boggs & Buhl's Book Department:

"The Pure in Heart," by Franz Werfel.

"Captain Blood Returns," by Rafael Sabatini.

"Flamenco," by Lady Eleanor Smith.

"Ambrose Holt and Family," by Susan Glaspell.

"A Square Circle," by Denis Mackail.

"Blood on the Moon," by Jim Tully.

"Goethe and Beethoven," by Romain Rolland.

WOODEN LEG TELLS HIS STORY

"A Warrior Who Fought Custer" (published by Midwest) was written by Thomas B. Marquis, who has lived in Montana 41 years. Through one of the Indian warriors, Wooden Leg, he has gained information of the massacre that left no survivors.

Wooden Leg was the son of Many Bullet Wounds, also known as White Buffalo Shaking Off the Dust.

Gold had been discovered in the Black Hills and Custer was sent to explore. Fortune-hunters flocked into the territory. The Indians were given new reservations, but many were filled with bitter resentment.

Several months before the great battle some Indians coming from the agency told the white man was coming to fight them.

One day while hunting antelope an old man rose early and went to a nearby knoll. He shouted: "The soldiers are here! The soldiers are right here!"

Apart from being probably a true narrative of the famous tragedy of the Little Big Horn, the book reflects many of the customs of a fast vanishing race.

Indians regard the white buffalo as a spirit being or a "medicine" animal. The Great Medicine announces when one is killed: "We give this tanned white robe to the Great Medicine above."

Buffalo skins are used to build lodges. It took from 15 to 17 skins to make a covering for the usual Cheyenne lodge.

An old woman was an important part of every household. Her badge of office was a club. They had discipline.

When a warrior went on the warpath he took along all of his best clothing. If battle was imminent he jerked off his ordinary clothes and arrayed himself in fresh war paint. Every Indian wants to look his best when he meets the Great Spirit.

LIFE OF GYPSY IN NEW NOVEL

Lady Eleanor Smith, who wrote "Red Wagon," a novel of the circus, goes Romany in her new romance, "Flamenco" (published by Bobbs-Merrill), and again demonstrates her power to put thrills into literature. First the treacherous Lobo is driven from Spain to the English moorland; then his daughter, Camila, becomes the central figure of passionate drama and living poetry. George Borrow and Sir Walter Scott might have furnished some of the strands of this glowing tapestry; there are flashes of Stevenson and grim shadows of Emily Bronte. Yes, "Flamenco" is a novel that should last longer than a day.

Fiddler's Green

Among books of the sea, like "Two Years Before the Mast" and "The Cruise of the Cachalot," we must now count Albert R. Wetjen's "Fiddler's Green" (published by Little-Brown). Fiddler's Green is the Walhalla of sailors—where the good salts go to their happy fishing grounds—and Wetjen's book is a sheaf of legend which the Flying Dutchman and the author of the Bab Ballads might have compiled down in the rich unfathomed caves where gems of fairest ray serene are said to repose. The jaded reader might do worse than let the Sea Serpent carry him off to Davy Jones' Locker.

Tundra

Leaving mystery tales for the present, the Edingtons have done an admirable piece of reporting in "Tundra" (published by Century). This startling and breathless story of the north is an account of the experiences of Bert Hansen, former United States deputy marshal, Fourth District, Alaska. This true story of one man's life in the north is as exciting as fiction at its best. The Edingtons are to be congratulated for getting Hansen to tell it.

A Midland Saga

Miriam Monger attempts to tell the story of an Iowa family in "A Midland Saga" (published by Dorrance), but instead portrays the life of Flora Dunsalee, a lazy and unprincipled but attractive young woman. The hero is drawn into her web, but it takes 275 pages without plot or climax to drag him out.

Birthdays of Authors

Today, May 17 (1845)—Charles F. Dole, American clergyman and author.

May 20 (1470)—Pietro Bembo, Italian cardinal and writer.

May 21 (1688)—Alexander Pope, English satiric poet. "The Dunciad."

May 22 (1813)—Richard Wagner, German composer, dramatist and musical writer.

May 23 (1799)—Thomas Hood, English poet. "Song of the Shirt."

LOVERS ALSO LAUGH AT LAW

Matrimonial lore is collected by Judge Louis Harris in "Love, Marriage and Divorce" (published by Stratford). "The Romans built up the marriage laws of the civilized world," according to Bryce. The Hebrew ideal, patriarchy and matriarchy, the pastoral stage, all have had an influence on the institution. The laws of ancient Rome were more reasonable than modern laws, according to Harris.

He is an advocate of easy divorce, which he thinks would lead to less immorality because both parties would make a greater effort to please each other. Fears, hatred, prejudice, superstitions and interference of the church, he says, have made reform difficult and slow. The dead hand of ancient taboo is laid on human hearts.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG FOLKS

There's an explanation for every mystery and the supernatural doesn't exist, is the lesson taught girl readers by Zillah K. Macdonald in "Haunthouse" (published by Appleton). The young heroine takes a position as secretary in a lonely mansion where apparitions and shrieks make night eerie. When all is told it is clear enough that there are no ghosts or goblins, but there was a pleasant thrill in wondering about them as the well-written tale unfolds.

Edith Ballinger Price's story of Faith and Fiona, twin daughters of an editor, is told in "The Fork in the Road" (published by Century). Faith is the artistic one, Fiona is practical. The twins drift apart, but find themselves again. It is adolescent romance of the better sort.

ART COMMENT by PENELOPE REDD

Exhibition Pertaining to India by Stowitts To Open in Carnegie Institute on Tuesday

The week in art has been one of retrospect and—of prospect.

One hears of exhibitions about to be. Most important of these is that pertaining to India by Stowitts, which opens at Carnegie Institute on Tuesday.

Later in the week the American Museums Association will meet in Pittsburgh as the guest of the Carnegie Institute.

Meanwhile, Pittsburgh's sculptor, Frank Vittor, roams far afield in an exhibition at Bologna, Italy.

Vittor is represented by a bust of Theodore Roosevelt.

Penelope Redd

Six other of the Italian-born American sculptors were invited to exhibit by Appilio Gaudio, of Milan, who spent two months in the United States as Mussolini's representative.

Rambling about the town viewing many new objects of decorative arts, particularly the Ruth Reeves exhibition of American fabrics at Kaufmann's, one is forced to a conclusion not in accordance with current schools of thought.

The modern idea in art, we believe, finds its most complete expression in the decorative arts and of these, the textiles is the most articulate medium.

When Robert Harshe, now director at the Art Institute of Chicago, was at Carnegie Institute years ago, he arranged our first exhibition of the decorative arts.

That exhibition was like the quest of the Golden Fleece. Once one had reached the limits of the Boston Society of Arts and Crafts, there did not seem to be any others.

Finally, individuals were located hither and yon, including Peter Meier, who let the demon batik loose on the world.

Product of 'Village'

Ruth Reeves also turned up from a studio in Greenwich Village, and her decorative textiles were a significant unit in that show of 15 years ago.

Today, Mr. Harshe's effort is justified by her impressive textiles, which are especially designed as a series of window hangings for a 12-room country house.

Different weaves, including printed voile, glazed cotton, cotton velvet, monk's cloth, billiard-table felt, and cotton velour, were used as the canvas so-to-speak for her designs of American life.

These textiles, incidentally, have been shown within the past year at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, the Metropolitan Museum in New York and the Detroit Institute of the Arts.

Like French Works

Without any intention of discourtesy, one cannot refrain from comparing them with the collection of French paintings at Carnegie Institute from the collection of Chester Dale.

Ruth Reeves in practical American fashion has accepted the liberty which French painters won for the art world, and converted it into a medium immediately appropriate to life.

One perceives the isolated ideas on canvases such as the still life by Braque and the imagination is stimulated by the fancy of incorporating it into a repetitive design.

Subject for Fabric

The "Ice Cream Seller," by Gromaire, might be amusingly rendered likewise as a fabric for a country house with its strong color and formally chosen design.

Pedro Pruna, represented by a figure reminiscent of Picasso's series of harlequins, has actually designed the decorations for a dress-making shop owned by an Englishwoman in Paris.

The mild example of Dufy in the Dale collection showing a basket containing fruit is not nearly so interesting as his designs for tapestries and rugs.

So after all is said and done, in these days of diverse applications of the artist's ability to design there is no cause to consider an exhibition of paintings as sacrosanct. The decorative arts show around the corner is likely to be a child of the same artistic parent.

GOTHAM SEEN IN TWO BOOKS

Paul Morand's "New York" (published by Book League), is the record of travels from the Battery to the Bronx, from the Hudson Tunnel to Brooklyn Bridge. It covers everything from Poe's cottage to the gilded palaces where booze flows freely. Brentano's basement he calls "the catacombs of information." He confesses that he likes New York "because it is the biggest city of the world, and because it is inhabited by the strongest race in the world."

Another volume, "Manna-Hatta" (published by Manhattan Company), tells the history of the metropolis from Capt. Hendrik Hudson to Mayor Jimmy Walker—a sort of movie spanning two centuries.

Miss Furey Names June Bridal Party

By PATRICIA PITT

Not so long ago we were thinking about Yuletide things, and here the first of June is only two weeks from tomorrow!

The very first day of the glorious month of brides and roses boasts a glamorous event, a wedding. Virginia English Furey, daughter of the William Morris Fureys, of Wilkins avenue, will say "I do" on that day. The bridegroom-to-be is Dr. David Alexander Cooper, of Philadelphia, son of Mrs. John D. Cooper, of Henderson, S. C., and Shadyside Presbyterian Church will be the scene of the ceremony to take place at 5:30 o'clock, followed by a small reception in the Longue Vue Country Club.

Brother Best Man

Virginia has asked Eleanor Huston Rowe to be her maid of honor, and Mrs. W. Rankin Furey as matron of honor. The bridesmaids will be Juliet Hillman, Martha McKelvy, Wilhelmina Balken, Catharine Gordon, Mary Mellon McClung, all prominent Pittsburgh society girls, and Dorothy Fuller, of Greenwich, Conn.

Marshall Y. Cooper will be his brother's best man, and W. Rankin Furey, brother of the bride-to-be, Edward Willock and Vance Harper, all of Pittsburgh; Dr. Thomas Zullick, of Easton; John Zollicoffer, of Henderson, N. Of course there'll be entertainments galore for the popular bride-to-be. One will be given tonight, a buffet supper in the Pittsburgh Golf Club, with Wilhelmina Balken as hostess. Recently Mary Mellon McClung entertained with a tea.

The Professional Players, who have appeared from time to time in other cities, are to have their Pittsburgh pre-

Congress of Clubs to Elect New President This Week

Mrs. D. E. Miller to Oppose Mrs. T. M. Stahlman, Choice Of Nominating Committee

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG
Club Editor.

The annual election at the Congress of Clubs, which this year means the choice of a new president, will be one of the most important club events of the week. The meeting will take place Friday at the clubhouse.

Two candidates are in the presidential field—Mrs. T. M. Stahlman, the nominating committee's choice, and Mrs. D. Edwin Miller, who will be presented on an independent ticket. And there are even rumors of a "dark horse" to add excitement to the prospect.

Careers Varied

Both candidates have had varied careers in club work and both have been prominent in Congress affairs. Mrs. Stahlman is a charter member of the Congress which she has served in various capacities—on the resolutions, membership and by-law revision committees, as chairman of the 1930 nominating committee and the finance committee, and as a member of the Dr. Dranga medical scholarship committee. She is now finishing her second year as second vice president, having previously served as a director for two years.

Parliamentary procedure has probably been Mrs. Stahlman's most engrossing activity and for the last two years for over a period of six consecutive weeks during October and November, she has been leader of a parliamentary practice class for individual members and affiliated club presidents at the Congress.

In Reading Club

Mrs. Stahlman's earliest club activity was in a small reading club and as a member of the King's Daughters. Her first Pittsburgh affiliation was as secretary of the Allegheny County Child Welfare Council of the National Congress of Mothers and president of the South Hills Child Welfare Circle of the same organization, both of which were later absorbed by Parent-Teacher groups.

Mrs. Stahlman is a past president of the Tourists' Club, the second oldest club in Pittsburgh, and of the Dormont New Century Club. During her regime the latter reached the peak of its membership and had a season of varied interests, each one linking up more or less with the community.

Aided During War

During the war Mrs. Stahlman served in the Liberty Loan campaigns, was chairman for the Delmont section in the War Saving Stamp drive and was war treasurer of the Dormont Boys' Comfort League. She is a past president of South Hills Unit No. 156, American Legion Auxiliary, and is now completing a two-year term as director in the Department of Pennsylvania, American Legion Auxiliary, in which she served as chairman of the state by-law committee.

She was twice Pennsylvania's representative on the national by-law committee of the auxiliary. Also, she is a member of the Chautauqua Reading Circle, class of 1923; Allegheny County Medical Auxiliary, Allegheny County League of Women Voters, Order of the Eastern Star, Nazareth Shrine, Women's Christian Temperance Union and Veterans' Hospital Committee.

Active Worker

Mrs. Miller is best known at the Congress for her remarkable work as chairman of education, a post which she has held for all but one of the seven years during which she has been a member of the department. She resigned from the first vice presidency of the Congress.

Like Mrs. Stahlman, Mrs. Miller has been interested in parliamentary law and it was under her direction in 1924 that the department of education organized the first parliamentary law class at the Congress, carrying it on with success until two years ago, under such leaders as Mrs. William Anderson, the late Mrs. Dulce Fiske Fairman and the late Mrs. R. T. Hood.

Mrs. Miller's club work has extended to the State and General Federations, for she has been chairman of street and highway safety and fire protection in the national organization for a year and a half and is just concluding a two-year term as State Federation chairman of the division of community service.

Club Affiliations

She is a member of the American Association of University Women, a past president of the Irving College Club and the Uxority Club, a charter member and vice president of the Sarah Sloan Scholarship Club, a charter member of the Woman's Clubs of Regent Square and Swissvale, a member of the Woman's Club of Pittsburgh, of the Flag Day Association, and is retiring chairman of the National Better Magazines Council. She is a past officer of Pittsburgh Chapter No. 39, Order of the Eastern Star, and a past patron of Friendship Court No. 88, Order of the Amaranth.

When she was a vice president in the Western Pennsylvania Safety Council, Mrs. Miller directed the first safe drivers' school for women and she has spoken before the National Safety Congress. As a matter of fact, her speaking engagements demand a great deal of her time and she has been heard on a variety of subjects by organizations of many different kinds, both in Pittsburgh and its environs as well as in other cities.

Mrs. Miller recently was re-elected to the Pennsylvania Committee on Penal Affairs and to the western branch of the committee. She is a member of the Juvenile Court offenders' committee of the western branch. She is also a director of the Goodwill Industries Auxiliary.

Game in Auction Bridge Serves Only to Emphasize Superiority of Contract

By ERNEST H. HEINRICHS

Sun-Telegraph Bridge Expert.

A correspondent to this column from Brownsville, Pa., seems to have a grievance.

In a recent letter, he writes:

"I have always enjoyed reading your articles ever since their appearance in the Sun-Telegraph, but of late I have been somewhat disappointed. I think you are devoting too much space to contract bridge and contract bridge players. Do not forget that auction bridge is still very much alive; in fact, I believe that with the exception of a few clubs in the larger cities the old game is still the favorite with the rank and file of bridge players.

Likes Old Game

"And as for myself, I know that I shall never take up this new game with its many confusing bidding systems, its complicated conventions and its excessive scoring schedule. I am getting a lot of fun out of the old game which requires much less mental exertion and yet affords me many a thrill and exhilaration. Inclosed I am sending you a deal in which I played the hand in the North and had the satisfaction of making a grand slam. My partner, South, had dealt and opened the auction with a bid of one club. After West passed, I bid two hearts, which gave me the declaration. It may interest you how I made the 13 tricks.

"East opened the play by leading the 10 of diamonds, South covered with the jack, West with the king and I took the trick in my own hand with the ace. I then led the jack of clubs, which I covered in dummy with the ace for the second trick. For the third trick, I returned the club lead which I 'ruffed' in my own hand.

Hearts Take Tricks

The next two tricks I took in hearts, throwing the lead for the fifth trick to dummy. As this exhausted all opposing trumps, I led another club from the South hand, which I trumped in my hand for the sixth trick.

For the seventh trick I led the five of diamonds, the trick going to the queen in dummy. For the eighth and ninth tricks I led two clubs from South's hand, on which I discarded two spades. For the tenth trick the ace of spades was led and the last three tricks were taken by the three remaining trumps in my hand.

Here is the deal:

NORTH.
Spades—10-9-6.
Hearts—K-10-9-8-7-6-4.
Clubs—J.
Diamonds—A-5.

WEST.
Spades—Q-J-5-2.
Hearts—J-2.
Clubs—K-3-2.
Diamonds—K-4-3-2.

EAST.
Spades—K-8-7.
Hearts—Q-3.
Clubs—Q-6-4.
Diamonds—10-9-8-7-6.

SOUTH.
Spades—A-4-3.
Hearts—A-5.
Clubs—A-10-9-8-7-5.
Diamonds—Q-J.

Superiority Shown

Of course it is almost unnecessary to assure the gentleman in Brownsville that we have no intention to disregard or ignore auction bridge; but even the game he sends with his letter, and which gave him so much satisfaction because he succeeded in making a grand slam, furnishes a striking illustration of the superiority of contract bridge over auction.

If he received so much satisfaction from a hand that made him the declarer with a bid of two hearts, and he succeeded in making a grand slam, what, might be asked, would have been the exhilaration thta he would have experienced if he not only made a grand slam, but bid it.

While contract bridge is still comparatively young and is yet in a state of development, it is generally agreed, however, by those who have tried it, that it has many features which make it more attractive than the older game. Of course, it is true that the confusion occasioned by the many contracting systems somewhat retards its appeal to popular favor. But this drawback is bound to disappear as the game progresses. Even now there are very strong indications that the recognized authorities on contract bridge are not so far apart as they were, and that before long a standard system will be promulgated for general adoption.

End-Game Problem

Here is one of Sidney Lenz's prettiest end-game problems for you to solve. It is no trump. South is in the lead, and North and South must take five out of the six tricks against any defense. How can it be done?

NORTH.
Spades—K.
Hearts—4.
Diamonds—K-10-3.
Clubs—K.

WEST.
Spades—4-3.
Hearts—8.
Diamonds—Q-8.
Clubs—9.

EAST.
Spades—0.
Hearts—A.
Diamonds—7.
Clubs—Q-J-5-3.

SOUTH.
Spades—5-2.
Hearts—0.
Diamonds—0.
Clubs—A-10-8-7.

Must Know Conventions

An accurate knowledge of the various conventions practiced in the defensive game is equally important in auction and contract bridge, perhaps more so in the latter, because its results are more far-reaching, on account of the fact that in contract bridge higher bids are the rule and not the exception they are in auction.

A very important phase in the defensive game is the opening lead; indeed, the results in the playing of almost any hand are often determined by the opening lead. This has caused the introduction by the leading players of certain conventions, which by experience have been proved as the most efficient opening leads in the game. There are a great many of them, because there are so many factors which enter into their correct application.

For example, you do not, as a rule, make the same opening lead against a no-trump declaration that you make against a suit declaration. There are certain leads to make if your partner has not made a bid, and there are others, if he has made a bid. Bids by opponents also may influence you in your opening lead.

How to Lead

When playing against a no-trump declaration and you hold ace, queen, jack, and others, open the lead with the queen. When holding ace, jack, ten, lead jack. In most cases, when holding four or more cards in a suit, lead the fourth best card from the top.

When leading against a suit declaration and partner has not bid, lead ace from ace, king alone, and king when holding, ace king and others.

Lead a singleton when holding three small trumps or less.

Never lead a singleton when you are strong in trumps. Never lead a low card from a suit in which you hold a tenace like ace-queen, king-jack, or queen-ten. Against slam bids, lead an ace if you hold one, and from king-queen, lead the king.

If partner has bid and you hold four or more of his suit, open the lead with the fourth best unless you hold the ace or honor cards in sequence, in which case the top is led.

Rubber Score

C. B. Q., Etna, Pa.—A rubber in contract bridge consists of two games won by the same side. The winners of the first game in a rubber score no premiums. The winners of the second game in a two-game rubber score a premium of 700 points, but the winners of the second game in a three-game rubber score 500 points only.

* * *

R. M. H., North Braddock—In contract bridge honors are scored only when four or five are held in one hand. In a suit bid, four honors in one hand count 100 points and five honors held in one hand count 150 points. In a no-trump declaration four aces in one hand count 150 points.

* * *

G. R. T., Munhall, Pa.—The trick values in contract bridge are: No trump, 35 points; spades and hearts, 30 points, and diamonds or clubs, 20 points.

* * *

Judging by recent accounts in the newspapers, holding perfect hands at auction or contract bridge appears to have become epidemic.

A take-out from weakness cannot be recommended in contract bridge.

Chicane is a hand dealt at bridge which does not contain a single card of the suit that becomes trump.

SOCIALITIES :-: XLIII

Drawn from life by William E. Shuleold

ONE OF THE smartest women in Pittsburgh society is tall, stately Mrs. T. M. Jones III, with her sleek light brown hair and keen green eyes adding an intriguing note.

She's one of the most confirmed "first nighters" in Pittsburgh. Throughout the winter she and Mr. Jones are seen at the opening of every new play of note. She's vice chairman, by the way, of the Pittsburgh group arranging for the appearance of the Professional Players here next winter. Of course she attends the Stage and Play Society performances.

When it comes to sports, Mrs. Jones prefers the role of spectator. She always attended horse shows and hunter trials.

She's active in the work of the Pittsburgh Skin and Cancer Dispensary and is a member of the Junior League. She has two sons, Thomas Mifflin Jones IV and David Martin Hess Jones. And the Jones home is on Beechwood boulevard.

Madelon's Mirror of Feminine Fancy

DID it ever occur to you that the habit of wearing old clothes has gone out like the horse and buggy, or saying "sakes alive." The old idea of "if it's clean and neat" isn't given one bit of the respect that it always thought it deserved. For instance, it used to be if you were going on a picnic in the woods, you got out a dress from summer before last, did it up nice and fresh, and you were ready for frolicking and romping and the things that picnics do to your clothes. Now you go into the sports department and buy a bright new outfit—cheap, perhaps, but cute and colorful. You don't wear old dresses out around the house, because, if you do, someone's sure to drop in and find you looking dowdy. Lounging pajamas, my dear, or utility frocks but not old dabs of faded things. Oh, well, we're getting used to changes.

. . . Small Weddings

DON'T get it into your head, young brides-to-be, that McClements is "that terribly expensive florist who only goes in for large weddings." McClements is always delighted to take care of any wedding, no matter how simple, but this year with the economy wave rolling over us and many elaborate plans being curtailed, they're making small weddings a special feature. Altar flowers for small church weddings . . . simple home decorations . . . bridal corsages . . . bridesmaids' flowers . . . you've no idea how inexpensively they can prepare them. They're full of the dandiest suggestions, too, and suggestions that Mrs. Post couldn't shake a finger at. Stop in at 535 Wood Street, or call Atlantic 3726.

. . . For Enlarged Joints

AS A relief measure to all sufferers from enlarged joints, less elegantly termed "bunions," we suggest a certain shoe at Ritter & Morrison's, 501 Liberty Avenue. All we can say is it must have been designed by someone with a bunion, so understanding is it of the situation. The seam has been pulled far back so that there is no pressure on the often painful joint, and the toe is made so full and high that it completely conceals the fact that there is a swelling there. All in all, it's salvation for those with bunions, particularly with hot weather coming on when all foot troubles are aggravated. $10.50, and they can fit you in any size, any width. Go early in the morning for their famous unhurried service.

. . . Moths Like to Eat

WELL, folks, are you planning to give the moths their three square meals a day, or will you give your furs over to the Connolly Fur Shop's storage protection and do the moths out of the meals they love so well? You'd better decide quickly, because this is the time of the year when moths get awfully, awfully hungry. Really, though, Connolly's DO have one of the most efficient storage services in the city, and their charge is extremely reasonable. Also, they have a workroom connected with their shop where you may have your coat repaired or remodeled at summer prices. They'll clean it as only good furriers can, if you say the word. And, of course, it's insured from the moment they put a hand on it. Connolly's are at 207 Fifth avenue, third floor.

. . . Free Cook Book!

SPREAD the news to your fellow home-makers to write to Utility Hall, Philadelphia Bldg., 435 Sixth Ave., or call Grant 4300, Line 403, for a cook book containing about 125 of Utility Hall's favorite recipes FOR NOTHING. These are the kind of recipes that make you want to drop everything and get busy with mixing bowl and ingredients. As for U. H.'s program, Monday night at 7:30, a Request Program, which is usually a demonstration on the common stumbling-blocks of cooking. Tuesday, at 2, "Frozen Desserts," including electric refrigerator and some old-fashioned ice box desserts. Friday, at 2, "Cold Desserts"—gelatines, blanc manges, and such. Free, and sponsored by the Duquesne Light and Equitable Gas Companies.

. . . Patent Sandal

THIS should be a big day in the lives of all sandal-seekers after we've made the announcement that down at Parisian Bootery (Roosevelt Hotel), they have a sandal with all the foot-revealing propensities of an ordinary sandal, and yet with enough material at the shank to give the foot the support it craves. $5.45 at Parisian during the sale, which, come to think of it, is drawing to a speedy close. You can have this sandal in patent, black moire, white linen and other of the season's new materials. Don't let it slip your mind, also, that all reptiles are $6.95 during the sale . . . and all the rest of their chic-an'-youthful footgear, $5.45. Parisian's a swell little shop at Penn Ave. and Sixth St.

. . . Angel Cake

ACCORDING to a survey conducted by the Gold Medal Flour Company, there's a movement on foot among cake-eaters (we mean that cake-eaters literally), to eat their cake with little or no icing. So, Rhea's in their usual obliging manner have concocted a nice fluffy Angel Cake which wins its niche in the Hall of Fame on its own merits, having not a speck of icing with which to share its glory. It's the regular hole-in-the-middle Angel, made from the whites of fresh shell eggs, pulverized sugar and just flour enough to hold it together. Fine to serve with another dessert, such as fruit or ice cream, and nice for childish stomachs, which shouldn't be trained to too rich foods. At all of Rhea's Bakeries—the downtown one is at 441 Market St.—and 19 cents for the week only.

. . . May Sale

BEHOLD! a grand chance for belated mothers to complete Sister's and Sonny's wardrobes at awfully tickling prices. Just hop down to the Jay Kiddie Shop, 3007 Jenkins Arcade, where is a May Sale of infants' and children's wearables. The Coat and Hat Sets, divided into three groups of prices—$7.50, $10 and $12.50—are the big thing. These are in divers colors and styles — silks for infants, tweeds and regulations for boys and tomboys, homespuns with touches of hand-work. Noteworthy, too, are the $1 and $2 groups of dresses, originally much higher and only reduced because they are slightly soiled. You'll also find Sun Suits, Bathing Suits and Play Pajamas, with hats to match, at $1 and $1.50. Worth going to see, we assure you.

. . . Garden Tools

TOO bad "the man with the hoe" couldn't have waited until now and bought his hoe over at Beckert's, what with prices on such things as hoes taking a terrific price cut over there. And what a variety of farm and garden tools they carry! Weeders of all sorts, from little hand affairs to great adjustable ones that ruthlessly grab out weeds by the roots. Rakes of all kinds—wooden and metal and even some made of bamboo. Shears and sickles and scythes. Watering cans and wheelbarrows. Digging forks and asparagus knives and shovels. If there's a time for everything, as the Good Book says, this is certainly the time for a visit to Beckert's Garden Tools Department, 101 Federal street (just over the Sixth Street Bridge).

. . . Gulf Stream Cruise

GATHER round, girls, while we tell you about the Fourth Gulf Stream Cruise, scheduled by the National Tours to take care of the overflow from the popular third one. This cruise is particularly nice, because it includes the Decoration Day week-end. You steam away from New York, Monday, May 25, for the Gulf Stream and follow it on down to Bermuda where you stay for two days and one night, living on board ship all the while and thereby keeping down expenses beautifully. The great cruising liner "California" is your ship, and they say that what with Rudy Vallee's Vagabonds, and all the deck sports, and a lot of nice men aboard, you can have a marvelous time. Arrive home Sunday. All expenses included, $55 up. Talk to Mr. John Miller, Travel Department, Union Savings Bank (Frick Bldg.)

CHICKEN PIE
(From Utility Hall)

Line a casserole or ramekin with pie crust. Add chicken, removed from bones, and cover with well seasoned chicken gravy. Cover with crust and bake at 450 degrees until it begins to brown, then reduce temperature to 375 degrees to finish baking. If desired, potatoes and carrots or peas may be added with the chicken.

. . . Don't Be Sorry

OH, DEAR . . . these women will never learn. In comes one of our co-workers the other morning with a head of the kinkiest, dried-up looking hair you've ever seen . . . all sad about it, and no wonder. "Where did you get that permanent?" we sternly demanded. She mentioned the place. "WHY did you go there?" we demanded, much sterner. "Oh, it was so cheap," she wailed, "only THREE dollars!" "And," said we, "you paid $55 for that coat which you'll wear about three hours a day, and you refuse to pay more than three dollars for a permanent you'll wear every hour for six months." Then we gave her a little talking-to about Monsieur Lichti at Maison Frederic's, whose waves are a marvel of soft naturalness. (He's at 207 Fifth avenue, Atlantic 0884, in case you're in the market).

. . . Lines and Gowns

ONE shop that you really should know more about is the Lasner Studio, where presides Mrs. Lasner with a perfect genius for remolding figures, and an equally perfect flair for dressing them after she has remolded them. To say that Mrs. Lasner makes foundation garments doesn't really explain her work at all. Plenty of people make foundation garments, but not the Lasner kind . . . not the kind that distributes flesh, pulls in abdomens, straightens out faulty lines, makes a bad figure into a good one. You'll just have to talk to her to find out what a wonder she is. And, by the way, this would be a good week to go in . . . Mrs. Lasner's just come from the East, and there's a shipment of beautiful gowns there right now. (604 Clark Building).

. . . Love Seats

ON YOUR next trip to town, drop in at Gilbert's Fine Furniture, at 632 Smithfield street, and give a little time to that custom-built Love Seat they're selling for $79. Really it's a gem . . . solid mahogany, hair-filled, nail-trimmed, and they make it up fresh in your choice of brocatelles, velvets, tapestries and the like. That's the nice thing about Gilbert's upholstered furniture . . . it's all so bran-span new . . . you don't have to worry about how many people tried it out while it sat around some show-room. But to get back to the Love Seat, we'd suggest it as a companion piece to your present sofa or as the center of attraction in the modern two-by-four-effect apartment. (It's much smaller than an ordinary sofa, you know). Look it over, anyway.

. . . Lincoln Display

IF you want a good chance to see this new Lincoln we've been raving about so heartily, take yourself out to the showroom of the Schenley Hotel tomorrow, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday, where a private display of Lincolns will be held. The display will include several beautiful new body types, and a mechanical exhibit consisting of the new chassis and many of the features which make the Lincoln the car you'd prefer to see draw up to the curb in front of your house above any other. The Salon will remain evenings, so you haven't an excuse for not going. Then after you've seen them and imbibed a lot of enthusiasm, go over to the Linford Motor Company, 5124 Liberty Ave. and let them take you for a spin.

. . . Typing Class

IF you'll stop to think of the thousand and one places in this mad world of ours where the ability to type can help a girl get along, you'll hustle down to the Grace Martin Secretarial School and put your name on the books for their Special Typing Course, starting July 6th. You may be laboring under the delusion that you can learn to type yourself, but, for heaven's sake, DON'T. It's fatal . . . you will never get your speed, and you'll get into wrong habits that will be awfully hard to correct. Grace Martin's teaches you right habits, drills you for accuracy, corrects faulty syllable division, teaches you about letters and form work. They have many new and original drills based on a study of thousands of errors that have been made in classroom practice. Talk to Mrs. Cornelius, 18th floor, Keenan Building.

. . . Hear Your Fortune

TAKE a tip from a girl who gets around and toddle into the Wishing Cup Tea Room, where they've readers with amazing psychic powers and a cook who knows how to cook, Senora Theresa, well-known and popular, presides, and Mesdames Jane, Phillips, Berg and Reda read the leaves, without charge. Delicious 75c luncheon anytime from 11 a. m. to 8 p. m., and a marvelous dinner from 5 until 8. You can play bridge or party around without extra charge as long as you like . . . it's really a beautiful and refined little place to take your friends. (Plenty of men go). Mayfair Hotel, on Penn avenue below Horne's. Telephone Atlantic 6060. Oh, and two more things—Madame X, Egyptian psychic, has gone but will return in a month, and the Mayfair Grill is now open with an exceptionally good lunch for business men.

. . Register for Swimming

HERE'S a break for those who missed out on the Natatorium's last "Learn to Swim" Campaign. Beginning this coming Tuesday these six lessons on learning to swim by the new brain-and-brawn method will be repeated by Mr. Wilbur Bostard, and after seeing him in action we are convinced that the average non-swimmer can learn to swim from him regardless of previous attempts and no matter how much fear they possess. Two classes a week for three weeks, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, at 10 A. M., 2 P. M. or 7 P. M. It's delightfully cheap—only 15 cents besides the regular admission charge and that includes your suit, dressing room, etc. Call Grant 9876 or stop in at 540 Duquesne Way and register for classes beforehand.

. . . Double-Header

POP . . . pop . . . pop! That noise you hear is the advance notice of Dimling's stupendous offer of three packages of Popcorn Fritters for 20 cents instead of 30, this week only. Popcorn fresh every hour and held together with a luscious taffy, packed five fritters in a package and wrapped in oiled paper so that you get it at the height of its crunchiness. Moreover, Dimling's Pecan Fudge at 60 cents a pound instead of 80, is on the books this week. Brown sugar, loads of good butter, double-x cream and pecans by the peck form this culinary triumph. Be apprised also that Dimling's Anniversary is the first two weeks of June, whence the Taster Box will drop to 55 cents a pound. At the seven Dimling's stores or direct from the factory, 801 Liberty avenue. Add 15 cents for postage.

. . . Linen Footwear

WHOEVER thought of linen as a successor to the old white canvas material for shoes had a good head on his shoulders. It cleans with all the ease of canvas, and it's much cooler on the foot and easier on the eye. Why not this Cuban-heeled one-strap white linen slipper from Petty's? Plain and smart, and it fits with nary a gap or a wrinkle. $8.50, and that includes service from experts—people who have been fitting Petty's shoes for years and years. You can say "Charge it," if you wish, too—Petty's encourage monthly charge accounts . . . and they have a while-you-wait repair service. Oh, this Petty Shoe Company is an up-and-coming organization. Manvilles 'Arrive' in Mayfair Set

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER

Universal Service Society Editor.

NEW YORK, May 16.—Make no mistake, the H. Edward Manvilles have arrived socially.

Where five years ago there was some doubt—in certain minds—whether Mr. and Mrs. Manville would successfully scale the heights of the New York Mayfair mount, today there is not a doubting Thomas left in the fashionable ranks.

The alliance of the Manville daughter with the Swedish royal family did much toward winning the favor of the haughty bontons. Estelle's union with Count Folke Bernadotte, coupled with Mr. Manville's clever planning and Mrs. Manville's extreme graciousness, caused the leaders of our swelldom to fall into the line, shouting a welcome to the master and mistress of "Hi Esmaro" at Pleasantville, N. Y.

Given Approval

Several weeks ago the dowager Mrs. Vanderbilt—a social "diehard" if ever there was one—placed her seal of approval on the Manvilles when she accepted Mrs. Manville's invitation to lunch in the quiet restaurant of a Park avenue caravansary. A few days later another Vanderbilt, Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly, was included among the guests at a large Sunday feast at "Hi Esmaro."

"Florrie" Twombly adds a new name to her invitation list about every decade.

Can I say more for her ultra-exclusiveness.

Kilverts Sail

During the latter part of this week, Mrs. Benjamin Kilvert and her classicly comely daughter, "Chico" Kilvert, departed from the Hotel Pierre and embarked for Paris, where they will, as usual, be "at home" at the Crillon, overlooking the fountains of the Place de la Concorde and the green stretches of Champs Elysees.

More and more the Kilverts are residing in the old world, which makes many of us extremely sad. For Elsie Kilvert is one of those "charming people" and her daughter is positively one of the most decorative dinner guests I ever have feasted my eyes upon.

To Wed Nobleman

Grace B. Birge, who recently returned from Paree, is, according to exciting chit-chat among the Jeunesse Doree, engaged to a prominent French nobleman.

When the daughter of the Walter W. Birges, of 580 Park avenue, returned recently from La Belle France she confided to several of her closest intimates that she had "accepted" the Marquis Francois Vaillant de Champeaux, scion of one of France's oldest families.

Pittsburgher Married to Eastern Girl

A wedding of a Pittsburgh son and a Belle Haven girl has proven of much interest here. Mrs. William H. Klenke, of Belle Haven, Greenwich, has announced the marriage of her daughter, Dr. Dorothy A. Klenke, to Charles B. Nash, of Pittsburgh, which took place Saturday afternoon, May 9, at noon, in St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church of Greenwich.

The bride wore a charming gown of ivory satin and old lace, an heirloom, and carried yellow roses and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Oscar Jerome Chase, Jr., of Scarsdale, N. Y., was the matron of honor, wearing blue crepe, and carrying talisman roses and delphinium. Dr. Chase served as best man. The wedding breakfast was given in the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. George H. Chatillon, of Belle Haven.

The bride attended the Spence School and is a graduate of Bryn Mawr. She received her M. D. degree from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, and is assistant surgeon at the Neurological Institute of New York, and adjunct assistant visiting surgeon of the neurological department of the Bellevue Hospital, New York.

Velma Anna Mayer Weds Dudley Mertz

Miss Velma Anna Mayer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Mayer, Jr., of the North Side, and William Dudley Mertz, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Mertz, of the South Hills, were married Thursday afternoon by the Rev. A. J. Holl, pastor of the First Lutheran Church. After a motor trip through the East, Mr. and Mrs. Mertz will be at home in the South Hills.

Mrs. Hardy, Daughter Return From West

Mrs. Paul Sexton Hardy, of Edgerton avenue, and her daughter, Miss Carolyn Hardy, have returned from La Jolla, Cal., where they spent the winter with Mrs. Hardy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Uriah W. Tinker, of South Dallas avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Tinker and their daughter, Miss Betty Tinker, will return East shortly.

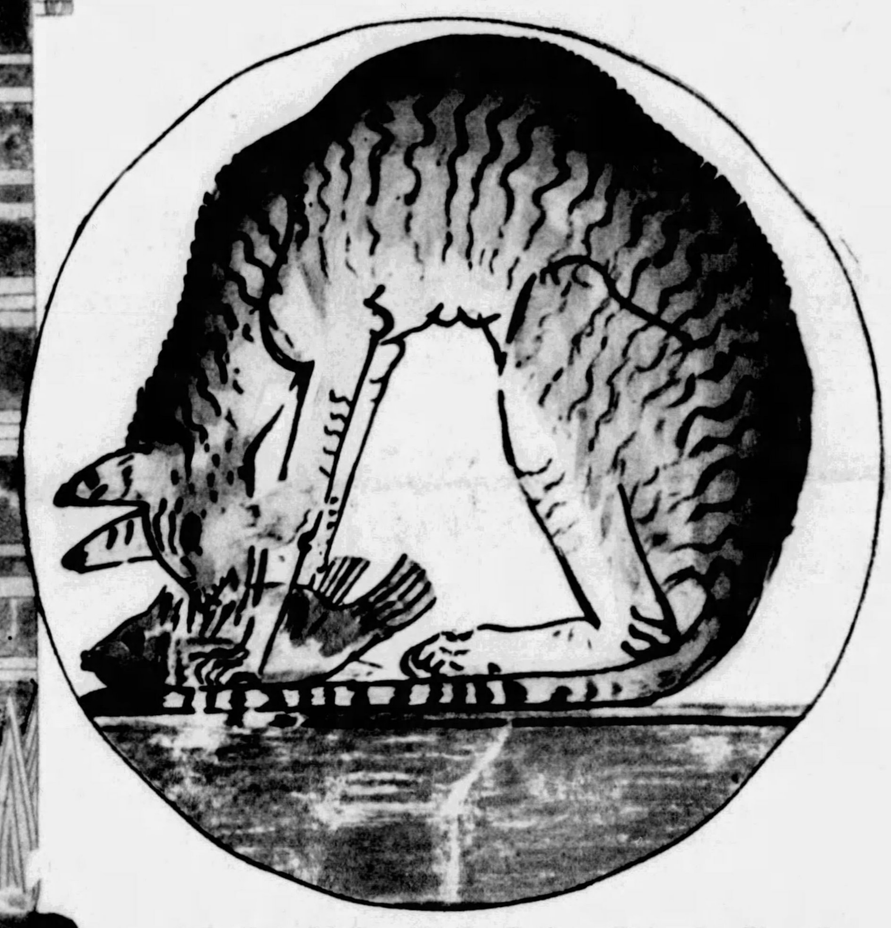
Private Life of the Ancient Egyptians

Curious and Interesting Customs Revealed by Remarkable Tomb Paintings

Queen Nofretari, Who Was Painted With a Black Face to Show She Had Been Made a Goddess. This Unusual Honor Was Paid Her, Largely, Because of Her Devotion to the Sacred Animals.



A Realistic Painting of a Cat Eating a Fish. Cats Were Revered Throughout Egypt, Certain Kinds of Fish Were Caught for Them, and When One Died the Family That Owned It Were Compelled to Shave Off Their Eyebrows.

2—How They Worshipped Their Animals.

FOR a long time Egyptologists were puzzled by the fact that old Queen Nofretari, wife of the Pharaoh Ahmosis I, was pictured in her tomb with a black face. It was thought that she might have been the daughter of an Ethiopian or Nubian King whom Ahmosis married to cement his alliance with the Ethiopians. Ahmosis was probably the Pharaoh who began the oppression of the Israelites, as told in the Bible.

It now appears that Nofretari was given her black face because after death she was raised to the status of a divinity. Actually, her complexion was a pleasing olive. The principal reason the Egyptian priesthood made her a goddess was the conspicuous example she set her subjects in revering the sacred animals, some of them regarded divine in themselves, while others were emblems of the gods. Certain of the Egyptian goddesses were always portrayed with blue or black faces. When Nofretari was painted black it was the highest honor that could be given her.

Upon this page is reproduced a tomb painting of the Queen sitting beside her husband. It is from a remarkable series of books recently published by the

Studies in Miniature of Our Ancestors and Their Homes 14,000 Years Ago

ONE OF the most unusual workshops in the world is doing a flourishing business in Cambridge, Mass., just around the corner from the campus of Harvard University. In its cluttered interior sit two men who would appear to the uninformed visitor to be doing little to bring back prosperity. They have turned out only six of the products they make in many months of seemingly indolent activity.

These men are S. J. Guernsey of Harvard University, and Theodore B. Pitman. They are anthropologists, and the products of their little shop are reproductions in miniature of our caveman ancestors who lived in France some 14,000 years ago.

Their market, strange as it may seem, is an active one, for museums all over the world want to acquire these supposedly accurate representations of human beings and their activities centuries before the dawn of written history.

The sculptor-scientists do not have to guess what prehistoric man looked like, or draw on their imaginations for the details of his domestic setting. They have accurate information with which to work, chief among which is Harvard University's famous model of an actual skull of a Cro-Magnon man, found in a rock shelter in France several years ago.

Cro-Magnon Man as Conceived by Science. The Figure Represents One of Our Ancestors of 14,000 Years Ago Returning to His Cave After the Day's Hunt With the Carcass of an Ibex.

Painstaking measurements of prehistoric skeletons, both of men and animals, have been taken. Photographs and drawings of the caves in which our Cro-Magnon ancestors lived have been made to assist the scientists. They work out their tiny tableaux of life as it was lived 140 centuries ago to exact scale. It is slow work and they have done well to make six sculptured scenes of primitive life in the months that they have been giving all their time to the enterprise.

The photographs above show three of the small sculptures of our primitive ancestors—a Cro-Magnon hunter bringing home an ibex which he has killed with his club, a woman of the prehistoric days making fire by rubbing two sticks together, and another male of the ancient race clutching his hunting club.

The other picture shows one of the scientists arranging the tiny figures inside an exact miniature reproduction of a Cro-Magnon cave dwelling in France. An interesting detail of this scene is the figure of a prehistoric artist decorating the wall of his crude home.

Eventually the anthropologists hope to make a series of tableaux depicting every phase of prehistoric life on both the eastern and western hemispheres.

Scientists who have seen the completed miniatures describe them as being as accurate as they are dramatic. The average person, they say, can learn more about the background of the human race from a ten-minute study of one of these models than he could in a week of book-reading.

To these men, who are familiar with the appearance of Cro-Magnon Man through careful study of his skull and certain of his bones, the tiny figures in the tableaux are amazingly true to type. And the cave settings are strikingly accurate, even to the crude paintings of animals on the rocky walls.

The Representation in Miniature of a Primitive Man's Cave Dwelling, Made by Theodore B. Pitman and S. J. Guernsey. A Prehistoric Artist Is Seen Decorating the Walls of the Crude Habitation.

The Caveman's Wife Did Her Housework With Crude Utensils and Made Fire, as Shown, by Rubbing Two Sticks Together.

Private Lives of the Ancient Egyptians—How They Worshipped Their Dead

Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, containing reproductions of wall paintings in important tombs at Thebes, Egypt, the study of which has enabled Egyptologists to reconstruct the day by day life of the ancient Egyptians, and to trace many modern customs to their dim beginnings upon the Nile.

The reproductions of the tomb paintings are faithful copies made by Nina de Garis Davies and H. R. Hopgood.

The expensive books are a memorial by Mrs. Charlotte de Peyster Tytus, of Asheville, N. C., to her son Robb, who died at Thebes while studying the tombs.

Husbands who complain that their wives lavish too much affection and time upon their cats should be thankful that they did not live in old Egypt. When a cat died in any household, the entire family were compelled to shave their eyebrows as a sign of mourning. All the food in the house at the time was considered sacred, and could not be eaten.

This could, of course, be averted by refusing to keep a cat, but maintaining one was a religious duty difficult to shirk. Cats naturally increase rapidly, and the penalty for intentionally killing a cat was death.

Even if a cat was killed unintentionally, the killer ran the risk of being torn to pieces by a mob, or had a difficult time convincing the priests he had not meant to do it. When a man found a cat lying dead, he stood at a distance, calling out with a loud voice, wailing and weeping and protesting that he had found it lifeless and had not been in any way the cause of its death. He was lucky if he was believed.

Of course, the overflow of the cats had to be taken care of in some manner, so there were temples in which hundreds of cats lived, fed by worshippers and maintained by donations and taxes. Queen Nofretari, the tomb texts indicate, endowed a number of cat-sanctuaries and must have had little chance to let her eyebrows grow.

But cats were not the only sacred animals old Queen Nofretari had to bother about. There were dozens of different kinds of beasts, birds, snakes and even insects which were holy.

The dog was highly revered at Thebes, being identified with the god Anubis, who had the head of a jackal and guided the souls of the dead to the great God Osiris. When a man of today says he leads a "dog's life," he means the reverse of the life a dog led in ancient Egypt. He was fed with the best in the house, and mourned devoutly at death. When their dog died the whole family shaved their heads and entire bodies. As in the case of the death of a cat, the food in the house could not be eaten.

In times of famine when many resorted to cannibalism, no one dared to eat the flesh of cat or dog even to avoid starvation.

There was, however, one curious way in which the surplus of sacred animals was wiped out now and then. In times of drought, pestilence or any other calamity, the animals were thought to be to blame in having allowed such conditions to come about. The priests would select a great number of these beasts, take them in silence and secrecy to a dark place in the Temples; first reason with them, then try to terrify them with threats, and afterwards, if the adverse conditions continued, formally condemn them to death, and slaughter them. After the plagues of Moses there must have been few sacred animals of any sort left in Egypt.

Queen Nofretari also worshipped the ibis, the long-billed bird which was the symbol of Thoth, the God of Wisdom. And in common with other Egyptian monarchs, she appointed regiments of men and women whose sole work was the care and feeding of the sacred animals of every kind. It was a highly honorable position, and often descended from father to son, and mother to daughter, as a family privilege. These people wore a special badge indicating precisely which animals were under their charge, and to some of them the common people had to prostrate themselves as they passed by.

When parents went to the temples to beseech the gods to help a sick child they offered up prayers and then cut half or all the hair from the head of the child. This was placed on one pan of a balance and money in the other until the money overweighed the hair. The money went to buy food for whatever animal was sacred to the especial god prayed to. Taxes were levied in every district for the support of the animals, and there were heavy penalties for non-payment.

One of the newest developments in modern beauty-parlors are shops where dogs and cats have their hair marcelled and curled. The servants of the sacred animals did that in Egypt at least forty centuries ago. Warm baths were prepared for them, and they were anointed with the choicest unguents, and perfumed with the rarest, most expensive perfumes. One ancient authority says that they were given only the finest rugs and carpets to rest on, that their deaths meant greater grief than that of a child, and that in some instances the cost of their funerals was fantastic.

There is one record of the cost of such funerals. During the reign of the Pharaoh Ptolemy Lagus, 323 B. C., Apis, the sacred bull of Heliopolis died. He is familiar to students of the Bible because it was Apis whom the Israelites worshipped in the wilderness in the shape of the Golden Calf. When this particular bull died, the official whose duty it was to look after its funeral, found the funds he had on hand insufficient, so he borrowed fifty gold talents to pay for embalming and entombing Apis in the proper style.

Fifty gold talents were equivalent to $1,632,000.

It is difficult to understand today how so much money could have been spent. But the embalming of the big carcass was done with the most expensive spices, and then came an army of hired mourners, the elaborate ceremonies and, finally, a rich tome. The sacred bull apparently required almost as expensive a funeral as a Pharaoh.

Geese were sacred in some cities. And so they were in Rome, later. The Egyptians conceived the Earth-god, Sibu, as a colossal gander, whose mate once laid the Egg of the Sun—and still did every day. When she had finished, Sibu congratulated her with loud cacklings, thus announcing the good news to the world. Because of this, he was called Ngaguoiru, or "Great Cackler."

Hawks were sacred to Horus, the divine son of Osiris and the Goddess Isis, and could not be killed. Their priests knew how to call them down from the skies, and they were fed daily with chopped meat although the people might be starving.

The curious ape known as Cynocephalus was sacred in both Thebes and Hermopolis. The Green Monkey of Ethiopia (Cercopithecus) was worshipped also in Thebes. The bear and the weasel, and wolf and fox were sacred.

Even some species of fish were considered holy, and it was a crime to eat them in the districts which revered them. The fish called the Oxyrhncus was so holy that several embalmed specimens have been found at Thebes. The Scarabeus beetle was considered divine. It was sacred to Ra, the Sun-god. An Egyptian Pharaoh once lost a battle because the priests saw two of these beetles working in the path the army must take, and made the army halt until the beetles had passed safely out of the way.

Few are aware of it, but the Egyptians went so far as to connect even vegetables and plants with religion. Onions have been found inset in the orbits of the eyes of mummies, and while onions, garlic and leeks were eaten generally, no priest dared eat them, although no one knows the reason. Many of the beliefs today in country districts about the medicinal and magical value of certain herbs, flowers and fruits come straight down from ancient Egypt.

Many explanations of the widespread worship of animals have been suggested. None of them quite satisfy all Egyptologists. Its origin is one of the mysteries of civilization's dawn, and will probably never be fully known. Certainly, it was of immemorial antiquity. In all probability it began thousands of years before civilization itself did.

The popular legend was that in the earliest ages of the earth the gods were weaker than men. Fearing man's barbarity, they took the forms of animals. When at last they had attained supremacy, they decreed, as a reward to the animals whose shapes they had taken, that mankind should honor them both alive and dead.

Apparently no god or goddess ever took the shape of a horse, hyena or camel, for these animals were not revered anywhere in Egypt.

Is This an Easy Way to Reduce Hips?

MANY curious machines have been invented to help plump persons get rid of excess poundage. Some of these are steam-heated cabinets in which the "patients" sit while the sweat-producing vapor swirls about their Others are revolving frames in which the would-be reducer whirls and spins and is forced to go through a series of bodily maneuvers intended to have the benefits of voluntary gymnastics.

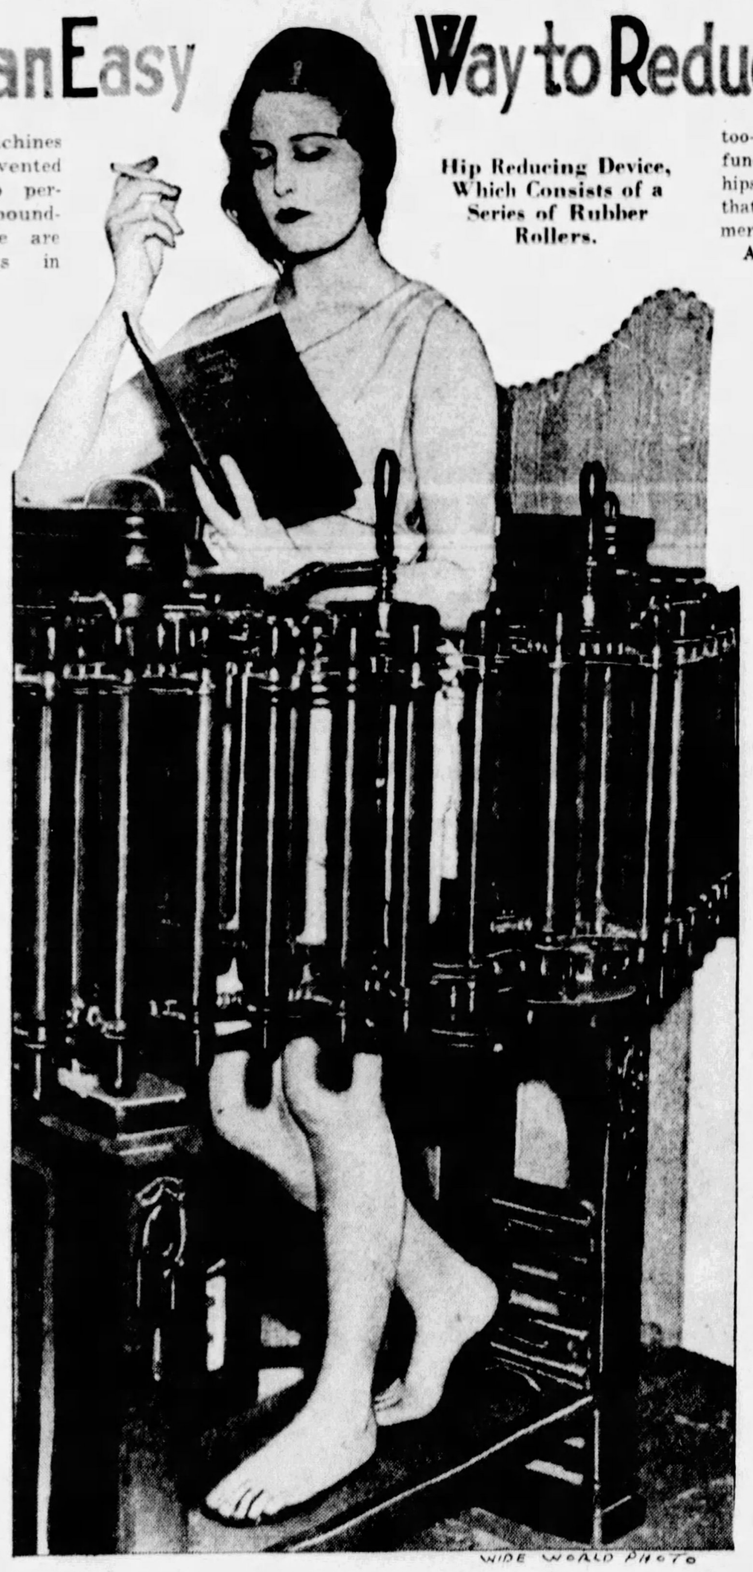
But there is no other reducing device quite like the one shown at the right. It is really a clever and ultra-modern glorification of the old-fashioned rolling pin. Just how efficient it is, remains to be demonstrated. It is said to be popular with that class of amply-padded individuals who cannot seem to interest themselves in plodding around a running track or lying on their backs to pedal an inverted and imaginary bicycle.

The machine is a specialized piece of equipment. It is not intended to shrink the circumference of a protuberant paunch, or to cause layers of fatty tissue to disappear from too-heavy thighs. Its only function is to roll about the hips and in its rolling make that part of the body slimmer and sightlier.

All the subject has to do is stand inside the battery of rubber rolling-pins. The power is turned on and the rollers start circling. Springs hold them against the body with a gentle or a firm pressure, as the individual case demands. The speed of the rollers' movement can be regulated by a special switch over which an attendant alertly presides.

In the case of sturdy persons of the type who like masseurs to get rough with them, the anti-hip machine becomes a veritable merry-go-round of vigorous activity. The rollers, pressing hard against the surplus flesh, weave in and out, never missing a bulge.

Less husky and adventurous souls who submit to the kneading of the rotary roller, get a gentler pressure and a slower speed during their reducing "exercises." The attendant stands with one hand on the controlling switch ready to cut down the speed of the rollers at the first squawk of the hippy one.



Hip Reducing Device, Which Consists of a Series of Rubber Rollers.

Where Slavery Still Thrives

IN the ancient city of Mecca is a flourishing slave market where males and females ranging in age from nine years to 50, are sold to the highest bidders.

This interesting fact recently was learned by an Englishman named Eldon Rutter, who gained entrance to this forbidden part of the capital of Northern and Central Arabia by disguising himself as a Bedouin.

"The slaves," says Rutter, "are mostly Africans, but here and there I saw a light brown skin which marked the owner as an Arabian. The girls are sold at prices ranging from $150 to $400, according to their youthfulness, beauty and efficiency in household duties. The male slaves bring slightly lower prices."

The female slaves, when they are young and good-looking, invariably are taken as concubines by admiring masters, and the older women are bought to perform domestic work. The males are acquired to work as laborers, servants, doorkeepers and grooms.

Tinted Cards in Gambling Fraud

IF ONE of a gang of several clever gamblers had not attempted to double-cross his confederates, it is likely that the members of the clique would have succeeded in breaking the bank at the baccarat tables in the world-famous Casino at Monte Carlo.

The swindlers, working with an employee of the Casino, procured several new packs of cards from the establishment's safe. Certain of the cards were painted on the back with an invisible chemical which could be seen only through colored glasses of a special kind. Some of the gang wore such glasses during play at the tables.

Night after night they won large sums of money from the bankers and it was not until they had cheated the Casino of more than $150,000 that a disgruntled member of the gang painted the cards with another chemical substance which his fellow crooks could not see through their colored glasses. Another player fought with him and police drove them from the city.

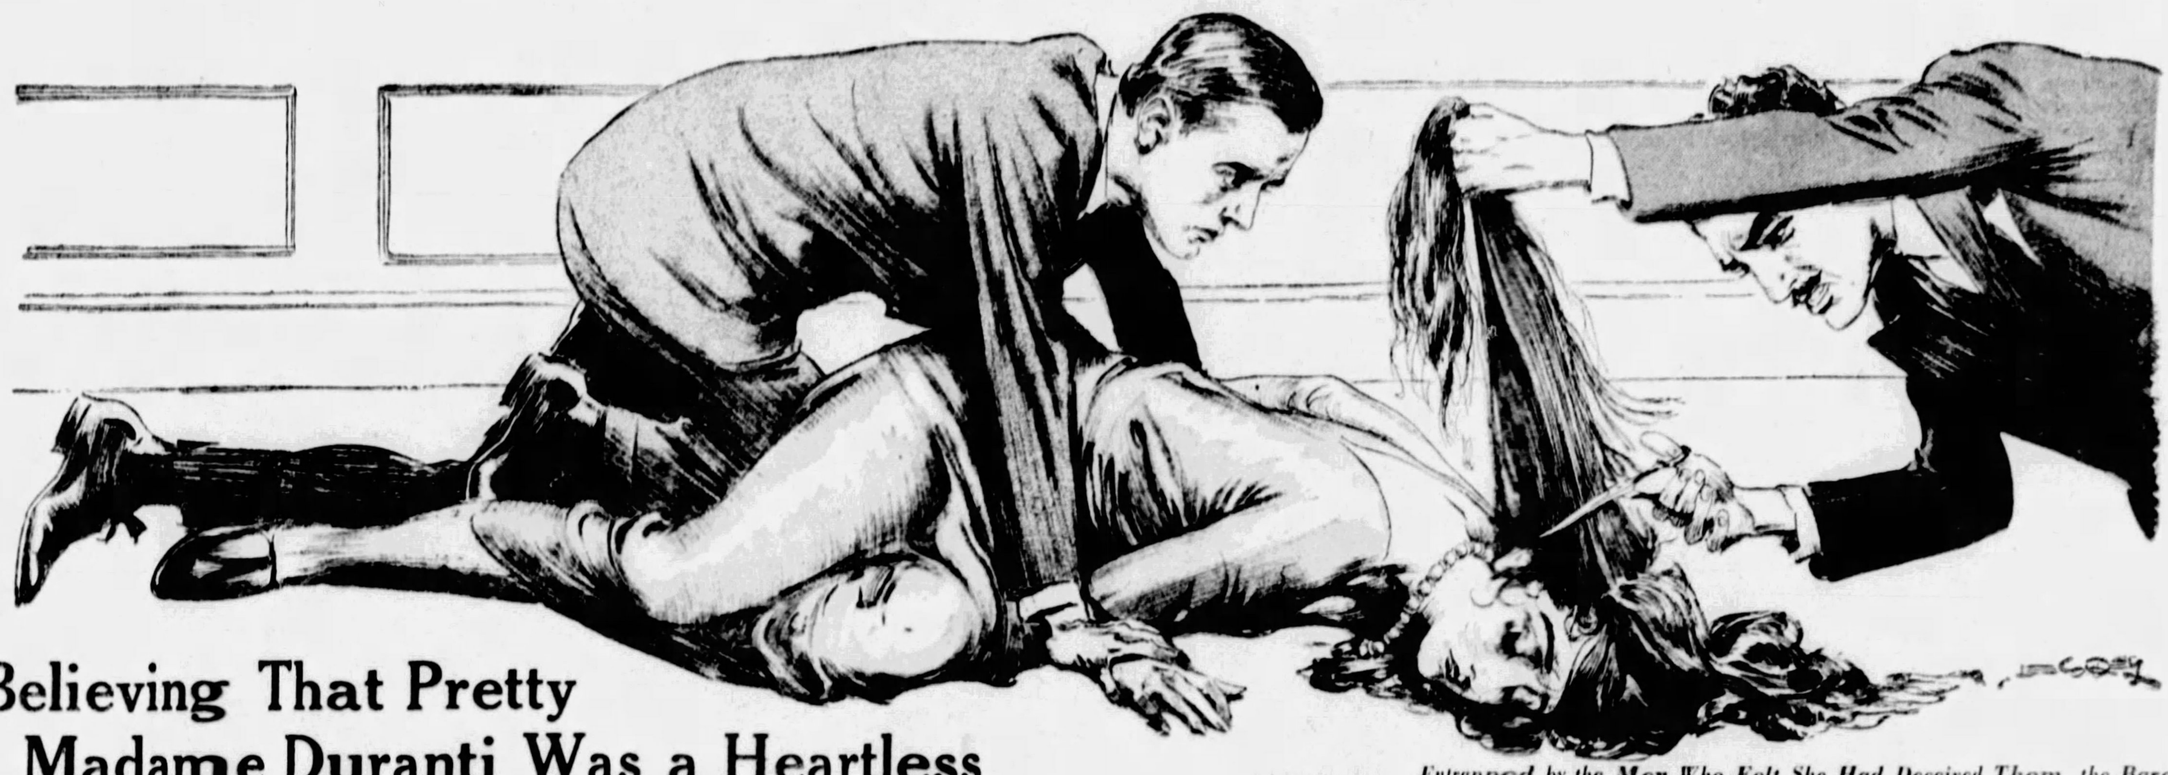
Punished the Baroness by Clipping Her Glorious Hair



Entrapped by the Men Who Felt She Had Deceived Them, the Baroness Fainted and When She Returned to Consciousness She Found One of Them Bending Over Her and Rapidly Snipping Off Her Hair With a Large Pair of Shears While the Other Held Her Hands and Looked On With Malicious Satisfaction, She Declared.

Believing That Pretty Madame Duranti Was a Heartless Flirt Who Had Encouraged and Then Frozen Their Attentions, Two Admirers Entrap Her, Cut Her Tresses, and Are Then Punished by the Baron

Ralph Dorper, Who Is Said to Have Planned the Revenge on the Baroness.

ROME, May 5.

ALL Italy is shocked at the cruel and unusual vengeance wreaked by two disappointed lovers on the beautiful Baroness Margherita Duranti of Florence.

That is, the Baroness used to be beautiful and in time will be again, but just now even her devoted husband cannot bear to look upon the ruins of what he once considered the most beautiful head in Europe.

The Baron Duranti, besides being a wealthy man, is interested in motion pictures, and he often remains at the studio till late at night. But no matter how late it might be, his unbroken custom was to visit his wife's bedroom for a moment, turn on the light and admire her wealth of long, jet-black hair, lying in charming contrast to the white pillow.

Madame Duranti never objected to being thus awakened, because it was a tribute to her beauty and proof of her husband's enduring love. But one night recently, as he let himself into the front of the Duranti mansion in the Porta Pia section of the city, the Baron was confronted by an agitated servant, who begged him not to visit his wife that night because she had a dreadful headache.

"Ah, then, all the more I must see and comfort the Baroness. I will call a doctor," said the Baron, and, brushing aside the servant, he hastened to his wife's boudoir.

The beauty sat up in bed and greeted him with a cry of alarm. It was easy to see that she was far from a well woman. Her eyes were wide and wild-looking, like a mad woman's, and her nose was red from weeping. But what upset him most was that instead of the long, glossy tresses, which for his sake she had never bobbed and were always let down at night, he saw a silk handkerchief bound tightly around her head. He could not imagine how a handkerchief could possible be tied so tight. It made her head seem incredibly small and gave it a shrunken appearance, somewhat suggestive of the reduced figure of an Angora cat that had fallen into water.

The Baron's dismay at her changed appearance was reflected in his face, and seeing it the Baroness screamed hysterically at him to put out the light.

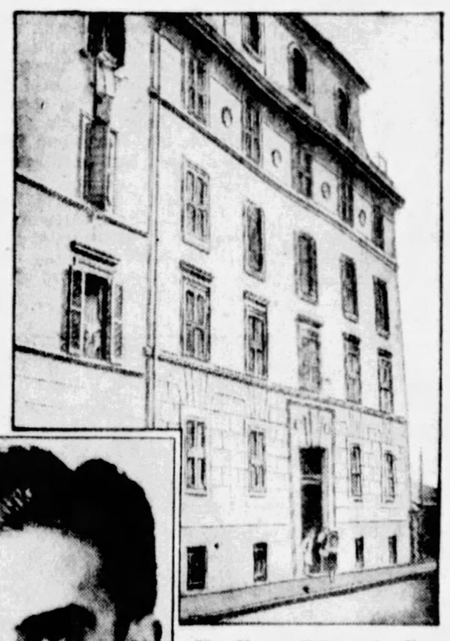
"Take that tight thing off," he commanded. "No wonder you have a headache."

But not until almost dawn did the unhappy woman consent to remove the handkerchief, and instead of the waves of silky hair that had been his delight, the Baron looked upon an almost bare skull, from which bristles of uneven length stuck out hideously.

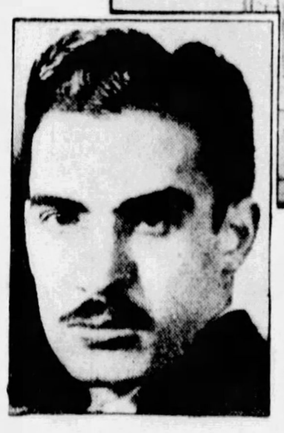
All he could get from her then was that two jealous and disappointed lovers, without any excuse or encouragement on her part, had lured her to one of their bachelor apartments and committed this outrage upon her for revenge because she had not yielded to either of them.

The Baron decided to take the punishment into his own hands and when the fight was over and all three men had fallen into the hands of the Florentine police, the two lovers told a somewhat different story.

One is Ralph Dorper, an English moving picture actor, and the other Hamlet Baucci, an Italian scenario writer, both thirty years old and both employed in the Baron's moving picture studio. According to these two temperamental lovers, who are now in jail waiting to see what the courts will do to them for violently robbing a woman of her "crowning glory," both were fascinated the first time they met the beautiful wife of their employer.



The House Where the Baroness Duranti Was Lured to the Meeting Which Resulted in the Cropping of Her Hair.



Hamlet Baucci, Who Is Alleged to Have Helped in the Punishment of the Baroness.

This was natural and proper enough, so long as they worshipped her secretly and from a respectful distance. Both say this would have been done but Dorper, the English actor, soon began to bite his nails in jealousy because he saw that Baucci, the Italian man of letters, seemed to be winning the heart of the Baroness. It made him unhappy and he hated Baucci. Still she was not his wife and it was not surprising that if the lovely Margherita's affections must wander from the Baron, she would favor one of her own race.

The Englishman could not avoid seeing what was going on because the busy and unsuspecting husband often invited both men to the house to talk business and because he considered them among his personal friends. Then came a day when the joyful Baucci went glowering and muttering about the studio. The Baroness had abruptly transferred her affections to the actor who was now enjoying sweet revenge, it seemed.

Baucci admits that he hadn't much cause for complaint either and should have tried to content himself with memories of such small favors as he had received in the past, but philosophy is cold consolation for a man who sees another man capturing the woman he loves. Besides, the Italian had been there first, was a fellow countryman and resented being ousted by a foreigner. Especially Dorper's triumphant attitude infuriated him. The writer had to keep putting out of his mind thoughts of personal violence and even deeds of the Borgias.

One day as he was sitting in a park wondering how long he would be able to restrain his jealousy, the object of his hatred came strolling along alone. In his anger he failed to notice that the Englishman bore a dejected manner unsuited to a successful lover. As Dorper approached Baucci glared at him but to the Italian's surprise, instead of his usual supercilious smile, the actor came over and sat down beside him. At that the Italian exploded:

"This bench is not big enough for both of us; nor is this city, nor the whole world, for that matter. It is time that one of us made an exit."

"Oh, don't get up-stage with me," said Dorper, wearily. "She has just treated me the same way."

"Margherita, my Margherita?"

"Yes, Margherita, only she isn't yours or mine either. She has discarded me, just as she did you and for no reason at all. But then they say that to have loved and lost is better than never to have loved at all."

"Bah!" answered the Italian. "That is philosophy, and philosophy is written by old men. It is probably good for old men but it is no good for men who still have red blood in their veins. She has ruined our lives."

The Englishman agreed and, as they talked, their hatred dissolved into mutual sympathy. It seemed that as neither could be happy again they might as well jump into the Arno River together and thus rid their minds of that tantalizing vision of the woman they both had loved not wisely but too well. Their sorrow was aggravated by the fact that both had been engaged to Italian girls until this other interest broke the engagements and their hearts.

Wasn't there, perhaps, some other way of blotting out that picture in their minds? For instance, they knew that in a few years that marvelous hair that had charmed them would be gray and the face it crowned would be wrinkled. If, in their mind's eye, they could only see her that way now, it would cure their infatuation. But strain their imagination as they would it was no use, they could only picture her as she really was. And then one of them had an ingenious thought.

If they could get hold of Margherita, clip off those dangerous locks and see her just once as she would look practically bald-headed, it would surely cure them. Also it would be a fitting punishment to Margherita for breaking their hearts. They did not stop to consider how the husband might feel about it, but then they hadn't ever thought of him enough to be jealous.

As the Baroness finally told it, she had been just politely friendly to both of her husband's guests until Baucci revealed his passion, compelling her to repel his advances and finally to treat him in an icy manner. Then, to her dismay, Dorper behaved in exactly the same way and received the same treatment. She had not thought of either as dangerous and when, after she had frozen Dorper, Baucci begged for a final interview, suspected no plot.

She says that he implored her to come to his house and meet his aunt and fiancee. If she would only do this and convince the women that there was no affair between them he could win back his fiancee and all would be well. Otherwise he would surely kill himself.

She went to his house at the hour arranged, seven in the evening. He was evidently waiting for her, for he himself opened the door. As soon as she entered she had a sudden feeling that everything was not so simple and innocent as he would have her believe.

She saw no sign of his mother, and the place had all the appearance of a bachelor's abode. The young man led her to a little sitting-room that was dimly lighted, and she had scarcely seated herself when he turned out the light. The Baroness stood up, frightened and ready either to defend herself or to flee; but the light went on again as suddenly as it had gone out, and she saw that there was another person in the room — Ralph Dorper, the other disappointed lover.

Being in the moving picture business they planned their revenge with appropriate light effects and mysterious entrances. She saw that Dorper had a long shining thing in his hand that she thought was a dagger but proved to be shears. Realizing that she was in a trap, the Baroness screamed for help and at once three women responded, a matron and two girls. But they rushed in, not like angels of mercy, but like three furies and cursed her with every evil name in the Italian language, accusing Madame Duranti of stealing the fiancee of one and corrupting the cousin of the two others. Overwhelmed the Baroness fell in a faint.

When she recovered consciousness, she was still lying on the carpet where she had fallen, Dorper was bending over her and snipping off, with a large pair of scissors, the last of her magnificent locks, she asserted. The three furious women had disappeared, but Baucci, holding her hands, was looking on with an expression of malicious satisfaction, she said. Their deed accomplished, the two men pushed her out on to the street; and the wretched woman found her way back home, her hat flapping on her shorn head as loosely as if it had been a waste basket.

It was now the Baron's turn to take action. So, to punish this outrage on his wife, the Baron enticed the two perpetrators to an apartment and there, aided by some friends, with fist and foot was damaging their looks, when the outcries brought the police. In their questioning they asked who the three women who had joined the attach on the Baroness were.

"Oh, they were an aunt and cousins of mine," said Baucci; "one of the girls is engaged to Dorper. They had arrived unexpectedly just before the Baroness, and I had put them in another room, as I wanted the sitting-room for Madame Duranti. Her cries brought my relatives on the scene, and seeing me and Dorper there with a woman, they let fly. But that scene wasn't in the programme."

The two lovers are held on charges of illegally detaining a person and causing bodily harm to the Baroness Duranti. But both the Baroness and her husband think they should also be charged with grand larceny of about a million dollars' worth of hair.

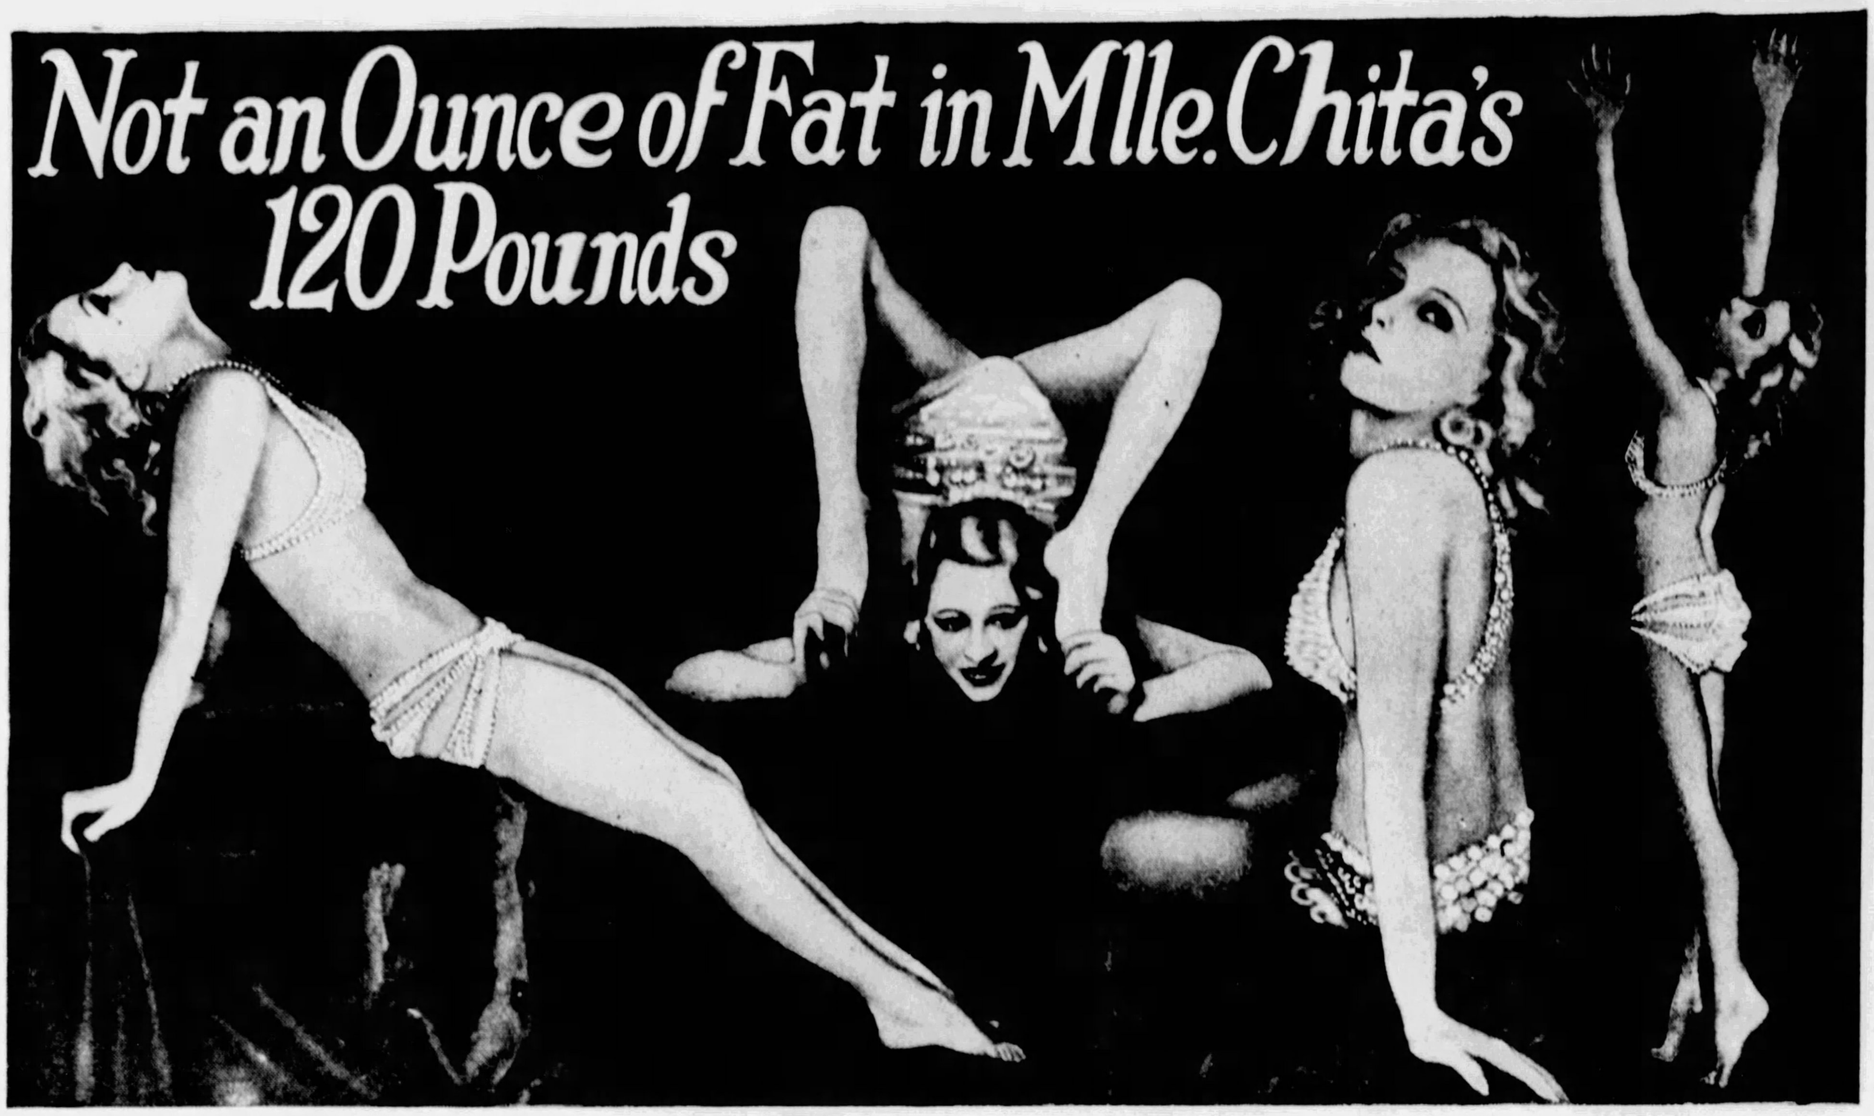
Not an Ounce of Fat in Mlle. Chita's 120 Pounds



Mlle. Chita, Who Has Suddenly Become the Idol of English Theatregoers and Whom Fashionable Folk of London Are Making Their Pet. She Is the Child of an English Father and a Spanish Mother, and Is Considered a Perfect Physical Specimen. The Photographs Above Show Her in Graceful Poses From Dances Which She Performed in a Musical Comedy.

ONE of the outstanding attractions of Mr. Charles B. Cochran's ill-fated musical comedy, "Ever Green," was the acrobatic dancing act of pretty little Mlle. Chita. Although the show had a very short run, yet this young woman with her childish figure and tremendous vitality, attracted wide attention as a perfect physical specimen which appealed to artists and sculptors and to overweighted women, because little Chita was presented as having "not an ounce of fat in her 120 pounds."

In her act she appeared with a male partner named Carlos and two other husky men. Mlle. Chita is already known in France and America, but her greatest hit was here in London.

Not long ago an eminent English physician, who examined Chita after a slight accident suffered during the course of an act at the Adelphi Theatre, overheard a well-known theatrical manager make the remark that Mlle. Chita is the only dancer on the European or American stage who has not an ounce of fat in her body. This, he said, accounts for her flashing grace and her almost ideally formed body.

The physician, not to take away any of the dancer's popularity, but merely in the interest of accuracy, took exception to the theatrical manager's contention—which had been used as the basis for several publicity stories for Mlle. Chita—by explaining that it would be almost impossible to find a human being without fat on his, or her, body.

"It probably is true," he wrote in a medical journal, "that Mlle. Chita has no excess fat on her remarkably active and symmetrical body. That is to say, there is little, if any, fatty tissue between her skin and her muscles. But, like everyone else, her internal organs, especially those in her abdomen, are cushioned, so to speak, in protective layers of fatty tissue.

"I will say, however, that Mlle. Chita possesses one of the most beautiful and vital bodies that I have ever seen and that, in the ordinary and not the technical sense of the word, she is free from unnecessary and unsightly fat."

The dancer explains that she was trained for her profession since she was a child of four. Her father, an Englishman, and her mother, a Spaniard, were well-known adagio dancers and they personally supervised her daily exercises intended to develop strength, flexibility and grace.

The fashionable set of London has more or less adopted Chita, who is frequently seen with her wealthy and titled admirers in public and at their homes. Many of her patrons are of the portly type, and are perhaps eager to cultivate the dancer to learn how she manages to remain so slim. Chita is training her ten-year-old sister to be a dancer.

"Betty is my hobby at the moment," she says, "and she is a promising pupil. I believe that, before many years, she will have me envying her for her physical grace and her skill as a dancer."

Fighting the "Devils" of Zanzibar

PRIMITIVE people in various parts of the world perform curious rites to protect them and their tribesmen from the rages and the whimsies of a numerous company of evil deities and spirits. Sometimes living animals are cruelly sacrificed and in a few uncivilized spots human blood still is spilled in an effort to appease the wrath of legendary devils.

On the island of Zanzibar, which is close to the east coast of Africa about midway of the continent, the job of driving away devils falls to the women. The photograph at the right shows two dusky belles of the Swahili tribe performing a part of the elaborate ritual by which they and their neighbors believe the devils that cause sickness, death, flood and drought can be banished temporarily from their tropical isle and sent scurrying across the stretch of the Indian Ocean which separates Zanzibar from Tanganyika, known before the World War as German East Africa.

The costumes and devices used for this strange ceremony are unlike those found in any other part of the world. The devil chasers squat on the sacred ground reserved for religious rites and pass back and forth between them a sort of doll, which they cause to dance much in the manner that the operator of a Punch and Judy show makes his characters behave.

During this dance they chant and wail and shout incantations. They hope the forces of evil will be amused and laugh themselves into good humor—or be frightened by the wilder movements of the fetich and run away to pester some other tribe.

As interesting as the garishly dressed doll are the masks which the feminine devil eradicators wear over their eyes. These are elaborately decorated rectangles, sometimes made of wood and sometimes of bone.

Uses Clock Spring to Hunt Gold

EVERY European country boasts several persons who have demonstrated their ability to locate water with a divining rod. Some of these specially gifted individuals go about their water-seeking with the traditional forked stick. Others do their work with curiously twisted pieces of metal.

But none of these "diviners" seems to be in the same class with an Englishman by the name of Frederick Stone, a native of Devonshire, who has, on many occasions and in widely separated areas, proved his ability to locate precious deposits of gold with a common clock spring.

Several months ago Mr. Stone paid a visit to relatives in South Africa and the news got about that he is the man who has a clock spring as miraculous in its way as the mythical lamp of Aladdin. Certain of the English residents of the British colony, having no faith in any man's power to detect the presence of gold with any device, least of all part of an inexpensive alarm clock, invited the visitor to demonstrate his extraordinary talent. He willingly agreed.

A scientist of the British Geographical Survey Department escorted Mr. Stone to an open field where there was a pile of six sacks. Three of these were filled with nothing more valuable than sand and the other three had small quantities of gold "planted" in them.

As he walked about the sacks, the "diviner" took his clock spring from his pocket and held it in his hands. At certain points in his circle about the sacks the spiral of metal turned slowly in the operator's fingers. At other points the spring registered no disturbance. In a few minutes Mr. Stone told the scientist which were the bags of sand and which bags had small quantities of gold buried in them. And he was right.

To further test his uncanny power, the gold-finder was taken to four gold mines, three of which had long since been worked out. He quickly discovered the ones which had no ore and picked the still productive mine.

German Newspapers Published on April 1 Last This Photograph of a Four-Story Bus. But It Was Only a Cleverly Faked Picture, After the Custom of Photographers in Berlin on All Fools' Day.

Weird "All Fools" Jokes in Germany

NOT all the amusing, and sometimes tragic, April Fool jokes are played by small boys who hide bricks under hats and pin signs bearing such provocative legends as "Please kick me" to the coattails of unsuspecting grown-ups.

Some of them are played by newspaper editors, more particularly German gentlemen-of-the-press, who get a great kick out of hoaxing their gullible readers once a year. Of course, there is no malice in these pranks, which usually are exposed or explained within a day or two after they are played.

The photograph at the left shows how one editor in Berlin fooled several thousand readers and caused the offices of several bus lines to be flooded with inquiries and personal calls from individuals who wanted to look at and ride in "the world's first and only four-story motor bus."

Curious crowds invaded the garages where the public vehicles are housed when they are not doing duty on the highways. The newspaper in which the picture appeared received several thousand letters inquiring where the bus could be seen, how many persons it could hold, how fast it could travel, how much it cost to build and how it managed to go under bridges and trolley wires without being wrecked.

A few wise citizens, including the employes of the bus lines and automotive engineers, who saw at once that such a conveyance is impractical mechanically as well as physically, recognized the photograph for the All Fools' Day hoax it was. But it was not until several days after the publication of the picture that the editor confessed to his public that he was merely having his annual joke with a fake photograph pasted together by one of his staff.

The editor of a rival newspaper amazed his subscribers with an even more surprising "news photo"—a picture of a gigantic penguin almost as tall as a man. The monstrous bird, a hundred times larger than any penguin that ever lived, was affectionately kissing a man with his long beak.

The story which accompanied the picture said that the Gargantuan penguin had only recently been brought to the German capital and that it was secreted in a private zoo. Eventually, the story went on to explain, the giant bird would travel all over the world as an attraction in a circus.

This story created as much furore as the four-story bus and every pet store proprietor, animal trainer and naturalist in the city was besieged with calls by persons eager to gaze upon the freak.

Several days later the newspaper in which the "scoop" was published admitted that the picture was a composite photograph and that the bird used was not only a normal-sized penguin but was a stuffed member of the species besides.

Back in the 1800's a Cincinnati newspaper publisher sent out an April 1 edition of his paper with a woodcut likeness of a winged sea serpent which, he declared, several sober residents had seen winging its way over the housetops. The monster was described in fearsome detail, even to the blood-curdling shrieks it emitted. Many of those who took the story at its face value emphatically refused to accept the publisher's apology for his innocent joke.

"Personality" Depends on Your Size, Shape and Bodily Make-Up

Curious Experiments and Study of 5,000 Dogs at Cornell University Lead Prof. Stockard to Discoveries Which He Finds Apply to Men and Women

EVERYBODY knows there are good-natured dogs, ill-tempered dogs, lazy dogs and nervous, restless dogs—short-legged dogs, long-legged dogs, dogs with big heads and heavy jowls, and midget dogs that can be comfortable stowed away in a woman's hand satchel.

It occurred to Professor Charles R. Stockard, Professor of Anatomy and Director of the Experimental Morphology Farm at Cornell University Medical College, to wonder if there was not a good deal of similarity between these peculiar types of dogs and the many outstanding types of human beings; and the result of many years' study has brought to light some very interesting discoveries by Dr. Stockard.

With the exception perhaps of certain twins, no two human beings are exactly alike—there is always some difference in what is called their personality. And so, too, Professor Stockard finds that dogs differ greatly in their personality.

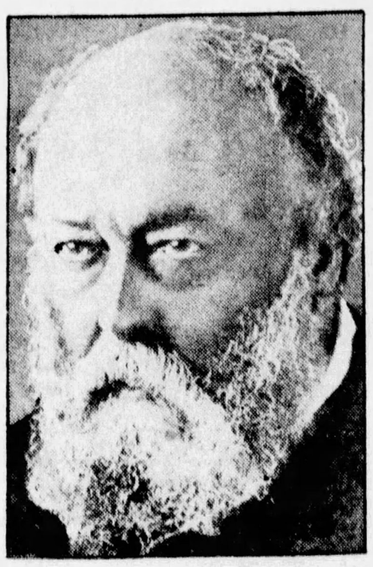
But what makes personality? Professor Stockard had suspected that a human being's personality is largely a matter of his physical makeup. But as it is not within the power of scientists to breed human beings experimentally for the purpose of producing such strange personalities as appear in the newspapers or are collected in the side-shows of the circus, he did the next best thing—carried out his experiments on man's faithful friend, but distant relative in the animal kingdom, the dog.

General Von Hindenburg, President of Germany, Who Represents the "Bulldog" Type of Human Beings.

The Circus Dwarf, Reflecting in His Features and Physique the Same Physical Characteristics as the Pekinese Dog.

Governor Louis L. Emmerson, of Illinois, a Striking Example of the Long Narrow Face and General Physical Make-up Which Is Shown in the Animal World in the Russian Wolfhound.

The Well-Known Features of Senator "Jim Ham" Lewis, of Illinois, and the Face, Features and Whiskers of a Wire-Haired Fox Terrior.



Ponderous Face of the Late Lord Salisbury, Which Finds Its Counterpart in the Canine World in the Heavy Head, Face and Jowls of the St. Bernard.

Curious Resemblances Between Dogs and Men.

Everybody has noticed that there is more difference physically between different kinds of dogs than there is within any other species of animal. There are dogs so small that they can travel comfortably in a lady's pocketbook, and others weighing 200 pounds, bigger than the average adult human being. Dr. Stockard found that besides this extraordinary difference in shape, size and behavior the most extreme canine freaks exhibited the same sort of personality usually found in the same type of human freaks. There is the St. Bernard, the Great Dane, the Russian wolfhound, the poodle, the Pekinese, the bulldog, the terrier and King Charles spaniel man, and both men and dogs get that way for the same reason.

In his recent book, "The Physical Basis of Personality," published by W. W. Norton & Co., N. Y., Professor Stockard gives an account of these interesting experiments, and states that the chains of little glands that drop powerful chemicals into the blood are the basis of personality, but that still other things may be behind their action. He points out that personality is by no means a fixed thing, but changes from youth to old age and even from day to day. It is a common expression: "When I saw him again he was a different person." Professor Stockard says:

"The bearing, the stride in walking, and the heavy sweeping gesticulations of the human giant are strikingly simulated in the actions of the St. Bernard dog, and the deep hoarseness of the voice is the same in the two. The quick, nervous vivacity and squeaky, yapping voice of the black-and-tan toy dog or the Pomeranian poodle resemble in a most suggestive way the manner, reactions and voice of the tiny human midget. Few companionships attract so much attention as that of the midget man and the tiny dog on promenade together."

Ailments of Dogs Like Human Ailments.

But the St. Bernard dog and the St. Bernard type of human giant are utterly different from that other big canine, the Great Dane, and the corresponding human type. They are so different that Prof. Stockard's experiments in breeding the two big dogs brought to light facts that may open up the cause of certain obscure diseases of the spine and motor nerves in humanity. Those two kinds of dogs cannot be bred successfully because their offspring develops a peculiar paralysis of the hind legs quite like a mysterious one that simulates locomotor-ataxia in human beings occasionally. It offers the suggestion that certain types of human beings should not mate for similar reasons.

At the other end of the scale is another curious parallel between man and dog. The midget dogs and midget humans are not to be confused with certain other small specimens. The midget is a perfectly formed human being different only in his size, and the same may be said of the black-and-tan toy dog. The human dwarf of the achondroplasic (lacking the usual cartilage formations at the end of the long bones) type is something very different. He is all out of proportion, with a big trunk and head, and a dwarf chiefly because of his short, bowed legs. And what is his canine counterpart? Stockard writes:

"The quiet, determined and rather severe attitude of the stocky achondroplasic human dwarf is very closely paralleled by the demeanor and voice of the bulldog."

There are two kinds of giants, one of them simply a surprisingly large man, strong and sound in bone, muscle and nerve. Such giants were Goliath, slain by David, and the modern prize fighters, Jess Willard and Carnera. These men are of the Great Dane type. The other kind are really sick men and their size is a disease, known as giantism or acromegaly. They get into the side show but never into the prize ring because they hardly have strength to hold up their weary bones and are short-lived.

These are the St. Bernard type and while the St. Bernard dog is not to be considered an invalid breed because its worst weaknesses have been kept down by careful breeding, it is not far from it as shown by the unexpected results of crossing with the big, healthy and powerful Great Dane. Knowledge of the laws of heredity has made breeding something of an exact science, though the breeder must first make a certain amount of experiments before he knows what material he has to deal with.

The force that determines whether man or animal will grow into giant or midget depends on how a few little glands secrete or fail to secrete certain stimulating or retarding substances into the blood. It is the varying action of these glands which brings a dog to maturity in one year, but a man in 21. This slow maturity peculiar to the human race must have evolved in man's first human ancestors or his recent prehuman ones and Prof. Stockard advances an interesting theory on this subject in connection with the cave man. He says:

"The earliest fossil remains of man-like beings, such as the Piltdown skull found in England in 1911 and the recent discoveries by Davidson Black in China, have been interpreted as coming from mature young persons of probably thirty years of age. It is probable, however, that these specimens lived at a time before the immaturity in human beings had become so prolonged.

"These fossil remains may possibly have been left by adult early men younger than ten years of age. Certainly the skeleton of the man-like ape nears adult size at ten years and a horse is fully adult at three years. At one time during the evolution of man his skeleton may have developed as rapidly as those of other mammals of approximately his size."

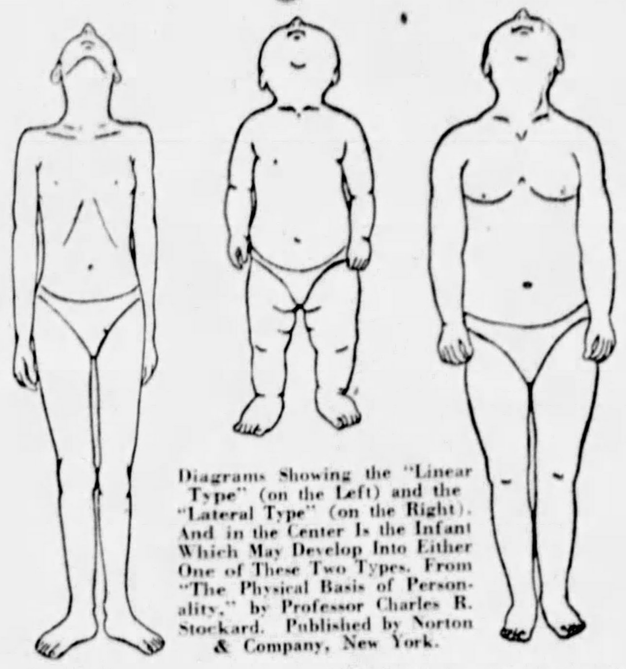
The thyroid gland Professor Stockard considers the most important influence in molding the physical characteristics which cause personality. When a baby is born without that gland it becomes a cretin; that is, a baby-like dwarf. If the gland is present but only moderately active through life, the baby grows into the short, round, lateral type of person. On the other hand, if it is particularly active, the result is a tall, thin specimen, known as the linear type—like Col. Lindbergh. It is not merely a matter of inches, but of a thousand differences, from head to feet.

There are some definite characteristics of the tall thin people. The head is long and narrow, the distance between the eye-pupils short and the tendency is toward farsightedness. The nose bridge is narrow and usually high, as is the roof of the mouth. The lower jaw is long and small with crowded teeth, the neck is long and small in circumference, the shoulders high and square, the trunk short, narrow and tapering toward the waist. The extremities are long, with light bones and long, slender muscles.

In youth they are generally considered under weight and at first develop slowly, but the males later have deep voices. The basso profundo of the opera is usually a tall, hungry-looking man, while the tenors are shorter and have difficulty in keeping their weight down. Those things are rather common observations, but others are not; such as that tall folks have tender, sensitive skins and digestive tracts. In good health, they rarely laugh out loud and never scream. One can hardly imagine a deep-voiced sheik. They are usually considered persons blessed with naturally steady nerves while as a matter of fact they have to constantly keep them under conscious control.

In a street car accident, Dr. Stockard points out that it is the stout woman who screams, but the thin woman beside her, who "keeps her head," is the one who feels the effects of it afterward on her nervous system. It was the linear type which suffered most from shell-shock during the war.

The short or lateral type is the opposite of all this. His skin and digestive tract are not sensitive and yet he is so emotional that he gives everyone the opposite impression. The thin, linear type is the adventurer, always exploring and experimenting, getting into all corners of the earth and coming to untimely ends. The lateral type looks before he leaps and only moves after careful plans and attention to details.



Diagrams Showing the "Linear Type" (on the Left) and the "Lateral Type" (on the Right). And in the Center Is the Infant Which May Develop Into Either One of These Two Types. From "The Physical Basis of Personality," by Professor Charles R. Stockard. Published by Norton & Company, New York.

Said to Be the Smallest Dog in the World—Can Be Carried in a Lady's Pocketbook.

The Largest Dog in the World—the Huge Irish Wolfhound Which, on Its Hind Legs, Is Considerably Taller Than a Man.

The linear type likes meat and other proteins while the lateral goes in for sweets and starches. Both types are more pronounced in the male than in the female. The fair sex tends toward the lateral.

In savage races (and, apparently from the fossil bones, prehistoric man also) those who live near the ocean tend to be linear, probably because near the sea there is a more plentiful supply of iodine essential to the activity of the thyroid. In the interior, where iodine is scarce in food and water, the lateral type is more prevalent.

All things being equal the lateral stands the wear and tear of life better. His nerves are less on edge, perhaps because the nerve fibres do not need to be stretched to cover such long distances and, for the same reason, the heart has less footage of arteries and veins to pump blood through and, most important of all, because the lateral takes life more easily and does not assume more responsibilities than he can comfortably carry. The linear type has most of his characteristics reflected in the Great Dane and the lateral type in the bulldog.

While there are the two outstanding different types of human beings which might popularly be called the tall-thin and the short-broad people, yet there are, of course, many persons who are a mixture of these two types. And an individual may carry in him characteristics which are hidden and do not appear in his physical appearance or temperamental make-up. These are called recessive characteristics. The things which are stamped on a person's bodily appearance and general personality are called the dominant characteristics.

A weakness may be recessive or hidden in a strain of dogs or human beings until crossed with another in which this same weakness is also hidden. Then the weakness, instead of being recessive, becomes dominant and affects the next generation. In the Experimental Morphology Farm connected with the Medical Department of Cornell University more than 5,000 dogs of various kinds and breeds have been experimented with by Professor Stockard. Some of these experiments and their results were complete surprises. And much of what Professor Stockard discovered in regard to the physical temperament and personality characteristics of the dogs apply to men and women of the same type

When St. Bernards mate with Great Danes the pups, which look like little lion cubs, are often healthy and strong until the third month and then develop a curious paralysis of the hind legs which is incurable. The dogs drag themselves about with seal-like motion, though Professor Stockard says that some of the smarter ones actually teach themselves to walk on their front legs, like an acrobat. Professor Stockard points out the importance of this peculiar phenomenon as follows:

"Among human families there is known a condition of primary muscular atrophy which frequently affects definite muscle groups and results in crippling and inability to walk. The disease occurs in families in such a way as to make it probable that it may be hereditary in origin. The lameness in the dogs arises more suddenly than a muscular atrophy would appear and at the beginning of the paralysis the muscles are large and strong.

"Nervous degeneration and paralyses are known in human beings which in some respects resemble the peculiar paralysis occurring in the dogs. It is hoped that within the near future an exact understanding of the nature of this defective state may become clear, and that such an understanding may aid in an analysis of the human conditions."

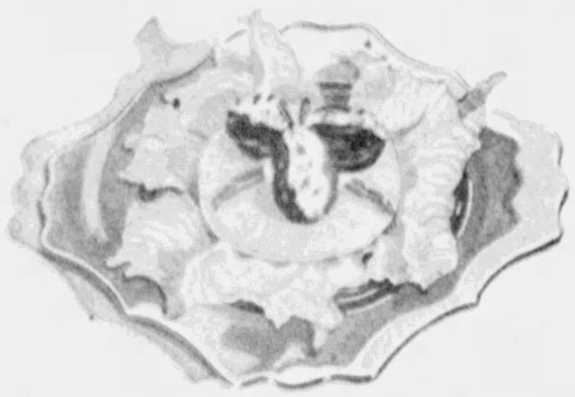
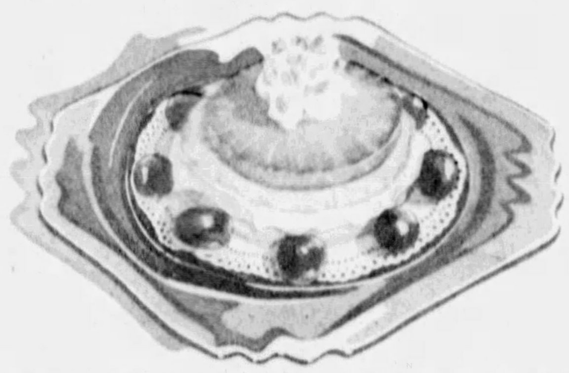
WORLD'S LARGEST GROWERS AND CANNERS OF HAWAIIAN PINEAPPLE



The successful salad must win compliments for its appearance as well as its taste. And this one will! Of course, perfectly matched, evenly cut DOLE 1 Slices are the thing to use.

STUFFED PRUNE AND PINEAPPLE SALAD

For each serving, lay a slice of DOLE 1 Pineapple in a nest of lettuce. Lay three strips of pimiento spoke-fashion from the center of slice and fill hole with stiff mayonnaise. Stone 3 small stewed prunes and fill cavities with seasoned cream cheese, then dip the cheese side in crushed nuts. Stand these three prunes upright over the mayonnaise in the center.



Many women will want to make this dessert with evenly-cut DOLE 1 Slices—perfectly matched for their golden color. But since the pineapple is going to be simmered, delicious DOLE 2 Slices will serve the purpose as well—and save pennies.

PINEAPPLE PASTRY CIRCLES

To 1 large can DOLE 2 Sliced Pineapple add ⅓ cup sugar and simmer until fruit is soft and syrup thick. (The 1 lb. 14 oz. can is just right for this recipe. You'll see the weight marked on the label, when you buy.) Let cool. Meanwhile roll rich pastry thin, and cut in circles the same size as the pineapple, allowing 2 circles for each serving. Prick with a fork and bake in hot oven ten minutes. Cool, cover half the slices with a thick layer of marshmallow cream, and top with remaining slices. Place a slice of pineapple on each, fill hole with whipped cream and sprinkle with chopped nuts. Garnish with cherries.

Nature gives different grades of pineapple— DOLE marks them for you . . .

Be sure to read about the three DOLE grades

Grade 1

Sliced—Slices which are the pick of the pack—uniform in size and color—in richest syrup of pure pineapple juice and cane sugar only. In appearance and flavor the finest pineapple skill can produce or money can buy.

Crushed—The same fine pineapple, in crushed form—in the same rich syrup.

Tidbits (Salad Cuts)—Slices cut into small, uniform sections—packed in the same rich syrup.

Grade 2

Also in Sliced, Crushed and Tidbits. Slightly less perfect—less evenly cut, less uniform in color—Grade 2 pineapple is less expensive than Grade 1, though still a fine, delicious product. The syrup is less sweet than Grade 1.

Grade 3

Broken slices packed in the same syrup as used in Grade 2. Grade 3 costs the least because broken in form, but the fruit is of good wholesome quality.

You can make thousands of fascinating dishes with pineapple . . . plain ones, fancy ones—some more economical than others! That's why it's such a convenience to buy Canned Hawaiian Pineapple by the DOLE grade-marks. They let you choose the grade of Sliced, Crushed or Tidbits best suited to your recipe, the grade most economical. . . . ¶ As a breakfast fruit, for luncheon, for dinner, pineapple's a wonderful treat — and rich in health-giving vitamins A, B, and C. When you buy this nourishing golden fruit, insist on seeing the name DOLE stamped right in the top of the can — and beneath that name the number 1, or 2, or 3. (You're entitled to know the grade you're getting.) . . . . . .

Young Michael Burke, the "One-Man-Crime-Wave"

Sixteen-Year-Old Schoolboy All by Himself Terrorizes a Missouri City for Four Months by Robbery and Murder, but Is at Home and in Bed by 10 O'Clock and Nobody Suspected Him

Parked in His Car With a Young Woman in Front of Her House, John Fisher Was Startled When a Flashlight Illuminated the Inside of the Car and a Hand Holding a Pistol Appeared. Ordered to Get Out and Hold Up His Hands, Mr. Fisher Did So and Was Backed Up Against a Stone Wall. When He Carelessly Lowered His Hands, the Bandit Instantly Pulled the Trigger and a Pistol Bullet Plowed Through Fisher's Head and He Dropped Dead.

State Senator Crouse, in Whose Home the Young Bandit Was Finally Caught.

Walter T. Powell, Indicted With His Wife on First Degree Murder Charges in Connection With the Michael Burke Killings.

GRADUALLY the eighty-thousand citizens of St. Joseph, Mo., are getting back to their normal schedules of activities after a four-months' reign of terror that kept them indoors at night, caused the State Legislature to consider strengthening the police department of that city, caused Chief of Police Earl M. Mathews to change police working hour shifts from eight to twelve hours a day and reached a climax after two men had been murdered, twenty motor cars had been stolen and more than 100 persons had been robbed in their homes and on the streets.

St. Joseph residents, believing their city in the grasp of a criminal gang of large numbers, led by "flashlight bandits," have begun to breathe freely again. The Legislature has dropped the proposal to increase the police personnel, patrolmen are being put back on regular eight-hour shifts and persons again are going about after dark.

One schoolboy, now safely behind the bars of a cell, turns out to have been the "gang of bandits." He was a "one-man-crime-wave."

The arrest of one 16-year-old boy has ended the reign of terror—a boy whose four-months' criminal career brought death and loss and terror—a boy who lived all that time with respectable parents who knew nothing of his activities and believed him to be living a model life.

That boy is Michael Burke, son of an attorney of good standing. By day young Burke lived the life of the average boy. He attended the Robidoux High School in St. Joseph and almost always was at home with his parents by 10 o'clock at night.

A model youth twenty-two hours of the day, he became robber and slayer between 8 and 10 o'clock evenings.

And now the boy faces trial before a jury on two charges of murder in the first degree—murders which he freely has confessed. The jury legally can return a verdict that the boy be hanged regardless of his age. The laws of Missouri prevent the hanging of any person under 17 years of age, but Michael will be 17 in September and the red tape of the laws' delays ensuant to a hanging could not be unwound before that.

To be tried in the same term of court with young Burke are Walter T. Powell, 62 years old, and his wife, Anna Powell, 55, neighbors of the Burkes and, until implicated in the charges against the boy, close friends of the entire Burke family.

The Powells, gray of hair and bowed prematurely with age, also face charges of first degree murder. Frank T. Kirtley, prosecuting attorney, has announced he expects to prove that it was under their tutelage that young Burke learned the robbery business that led him to commit two murders.

Michael Burke lived, until a few months ago, the life of a normal boy. His standing in school was only moderately high. Like many boys, he had run away from home to work in harvest fields of Kansas and Oklahoma and like many boys, he had grown a bit bashful and sensitive as his voice changed and his stature lengthened in his early 'teens.

When he grew to be almost six feet tall and still apparently was just a boy in every other way, he began to mingle less and less with other persons. When Mr. and Mrs. Edward Burke, his parents, urged him to attend school affairs at night, he merely answered that he didn't want to be with those "kids."

Visits of Mr. and Mrs. Powell at the Burke home, however, seemed to interest the youth. The Powells seemed to understand growing bashful boys. Mr. Powell raised game chickens on his suburban place, and more and more young Burke was seen helping feed and care for those chickens.

But still the elder Burke's order that the youth be at home by 10 o'clock was being obeyed by the boy.

"Where were you tonight?" the father asked when the lad came in at the specified time.

"Down at the drug store," he often replied. "I'm helping squirt soda down there."

Or, at other times the answer was: "Over at Mr. Powell's, helping him with his game cocks."

It was a bleak day last November when Michael Burke, no older than his classmates, but standing head and shoulders above them in a spelling lesson line, was given a word by his teacher in the freshman high school class. The boy spelled the word wrong.

He was given another word and again he missed. A third chance was a failure.

"Well, can you spell CAT?" asked an exasperated teacher.

Young Burke moved toward the door, seized the knob and swung the door open and then, as he stepped into the hall before the restraining hand of the teacher could reach him, he yelled back:

"C-A-T; there's your damn cat."

And, with the slamming of the door, he was out and away.

That night the police were mystified by holdups of pedestrians in widely separated parts of the city. A motor car also was stolen and abandoned. Detectives figured that one robber had operated in the stolen car.

But night after night the number of robberies increased. Always the bandit threw into the faces of victims the rays of an electric flashlight.

Morning papers began giving a daily list of depredations the previous evening by "flashlight bandits." The parents of young Burke worried slightly about their son's absence from home those evenings, but his explanation about working and being at the Powell home allayed their fears. The Powells, the Burkes believed, were good people and the Burkes were glad to see their son take an interest in any kind of activity, even though it was the handling of game chickens.

Night after night the flashlight robberies continued. As many as ten were reported one night.

Chief of Police Mathews met demands for better police protection by calling all members of his force into consultation and then lengthening their hours to twelve a day. Policemen formerly had worked only eight hours a day.

The robberies continued. Then on the night of December 29 John Brown, former deputy constable, was shot to death in the garage of his home.

Indignation grew and Chief Mathews called into consultation State Senator Emmet Crouse and a bill was prepared for introduction into the Legislature of Missouri requiring city officials of St. Joseph to enlarge the municipal budget and provide for an increased number of policemen.

Harry Rash, a resident of Savannah, Mo., was driving out of St. Joseph one evening early in January when a lanky youth stepped up to his car, ordered him to halt and started to rob him. But Rash drew a pistol and began firing. One shot went through the arm of the bandit and Rash escaped.

That night Michael Burke slipped into his bedroom without stopping to bid his parents goodnight. The next day his mother was startled by finding some bloody garments, but the youth assured her he merely had skinned his arm in an accident and that it was all right.

A few nights later another man shot it out with a bandit and again young Burke showed up at home with a wound, this time a very shallow one on the scalp. Again his explanation about hitting his head against a projecting timber satisfied his mother.

Night after night the depredations went on until January 11, when John Fisher, a packing company employe, was accosted as he sat in a motor car with a young woman in front of her home. The intruder ordered Fisher to put up his hands and get out of the car. The man complied but, when backed up against a stone wall, Fisher started to take his hands down. A bullet from the lanky holdup's pistol plowed through Fisher's head and he fell dead.

That night young Burke appeared a bit nervous when he arrived at home, but still his parents suspected nothing. A day or two later the boy's father lunched with Chief of Police Mathews.

"Chief, I wish I could help you round up those flashlight bandits," said the lawyer to the chief. "Their leader must be a crafty and bold scoundrel."

Chief Mathews, under a constant fire of criticism and protest concerning activities of the so-called "gang" of flashlight robbers, was losing weight. He told Attorney Burke:

"I must get that gang—and I will."

Motor cars continued to disappear and St. Joseph residents began calling off social affairs. More and more persons began to remain at home evenings. But that didn't solve the problem for homes were being entered in large numbers.

The night of March 22 two policemen spied a prowler with a flashlight in the residence of State Senator Crouse—the law maker who was asking the legislature to come to the aid of St. Joseph. Help was summoned, the house was surrounded and the capture made—the capture of one lone 16-year-old boy, Michael Burke.

"A school boy making his first misstep," suggests Chief Mathews. "After something he could pawn to get money to take some girl out."

The detectives gave little attention to the boy, but finally one of them said:

"Your father is heartbroken about you and you had just better get everything off your chest. You'll feel better."

"What would happen to me if I confessed to killing John Brown?" asked the boy.

"You killed Brown?" gasped the surprised detective.

Then it was the youth confessed to the murder of Brown, the murder of Fisher, the robbery of many homes, the holding up of uncounted persons in cars and on the streets and theft of large numbers of motor cars.

Never once did he mention Walter T. Powell and Mrs. Powell. But a detective learned that the youth often had been seen at the Powell home. So search for loot, which the boy insisted he had thrown into the Missouri River, was shifted to the Powell home.

And there were found rings, from which jewels had been pried, and other articles of jewelry, police said. So the Powells were detained. But still the young robber and slayer refused to implicate them.

A grand jury was summoned and the boy was taken before it. What went on in that jury room may be divulged in trial of the Powells and it may not. However, the aged man and his wife were indicted on first degree murder charges in connection with the killing of Brown and Fisher—crimes which young Burke so frankly had confessed.

"I don't understand how our boy could get out from under his home influence like he did," said Attorney Burke, after a recent conference with his son. "All times he was quiet and obedient. We never dreamed that he was turning bandit those few hours he was out of our sight.

"And the Powells—we always considered them good neighbors."

More Palmolive Soap was sold in 1930

than in any year in Palmolive history

THAT is a startling fact. It is startling for many reasons. First—there are more soaps on the market today than ever before. More soaps claimed to be "beautifiers" than ever before. But analyze their claims. Any of them. Search the advertising for information about what they are made of. Cosmetic oils? No.—Olive and palm oils? No.—Vegetable oils? No.—Palmolive is made of olive and palm oils. Few soaps advertised tell you what they are made of That is significant. Because many soaps contain animal fats. Palmolive does not. And because of that—women bought more Palmolive in 1930 than ever before.

"Use Palmolive," experts warn

This great Palmolive sale is startling for another reason. It is the greatest tribute we have ever known to the Palmolive doctrine of "Keeping That Schoolgirl Complexion." Some years ago women thought it wrong to use soap on the face. They were depriving themselves of benefits now known to millions.

You must wash your face. 20,000 of the world's leading beauty experts say that. "But," they warn, "use only Palmolive." They are professionals, to whom the lovely women of the world entrust their complexions. They speak with authority. And it is in answer to this beauty command from 20,000 beauty specialists that women used more Palmolive in 1930 than ever before.

Nothing else like olive and palm oils

There is a third reason. And an important one. The thing women prize in Palmolive is the skin effects no ordinary soap can ever bring. Nothing in all ages has compared with a blend of olive and palm oil for skin care and beauty. More women know that—more believe it today than ever before.

Thus more millions—unwilling to gamble with priceless complexions—turn each year to Palmolive—and this soap alone—to Keep That Schoolgirl Complexion.

Keep that Schoolgirl Complexion

800,000,000 Meteors Shot at the Earth Every Day

Fortunately Most of the Celestial Visitors Are Burned Up by the Friction of the Atmosphere, but a Few Get Through and Strike With a Terrific Smash

The Famous Meteoric Shower Which Illuminated the Heavens in Various Parts of the United States on the Night of the 13th of November, 1833.

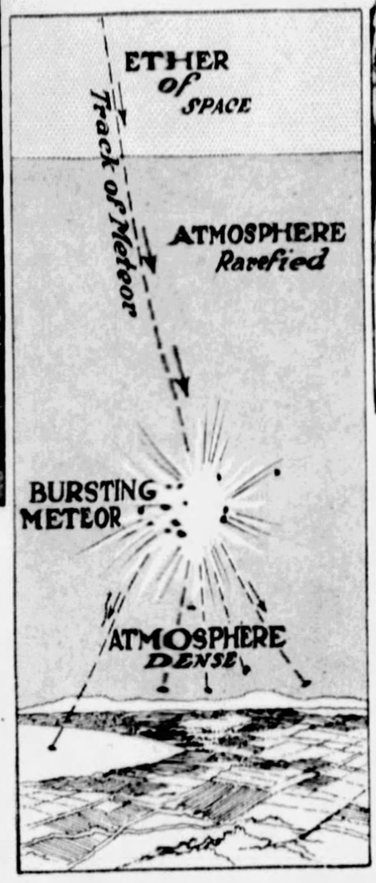

Diagram Illustrating How a Meteor Comes Rushing Through the Frictionless Ether of Space Against the Buffer of Atmosphere Surrounding the Earth. The Heat Caused by the Resistance of the Air as the Meteor Enters the Atmosphere Generally Causes the Visitor From the Sky to Explode Into Several Pieces. The Fragments That Reach the Earth Are Called Meteorites.

The "Forest City" Meteorite From Iowa. The Main Body Is Nearly a Foot and a Half High, and Around It Are Smaller Fragments, Even the Smallest of Which Would Have Been Able to Strike a Fatal Blow.

The "Willamette" Meteorite Found in Oregon and Now in the American Museum of Natural History, New York.

EIGHT hundred million meteors a day are headed for the earth, according to the calculations by Professor Charles C. Wylie, of the University of Iowa. Most of the celestial visitors in this tremendous bombardment are big enough to strike a fatal blow, and occasionally one of them is of gigantic size—so large that if it landed on Manhattan Island it would destroy every building and kill every human being and animal for miles around New York.

But there are two fortunate things which save mankind and its possessions from destruction every hour in the day. The greater part of the travelers from outer space are completely burned up by the heat caused by friction with the atmosphere of the earth. The earth's atmosphere acts as a sort of protecting shell and most of the meteors are heated white hot and then turned into gas. If the visitor is stopped before reaching the earth it is called a meteor. If it lands on the earth it is a meteorite.

Some of the meteors explode in the upper atmosphere, and while most of the shattered pieces are consumed in the heat, yet some of them reach the surface of the earth, usually rather small in size.

But now and then a gigantic traveler, rushing through space, encounters the earth's atmosphere and becomes tremendously hot, but keeps right on going and lands on the earth's surface. In Arizona can be seen today an enormous hole in the ground, a crater left by a giant visitor in prehistoric times. This meteorite penetrated the earth's surface so deeply that it has never been located in the depths of the earth.

More recently a giant from the heavens struck the earth in northern Siberia. The spot was located by a Russian scientific expedition and the report of what the scientists found has been studied with great interest, because it is the first careful examination of the fall of a meteorite in modern times and of just what happened.

It is fortunate for mankind that most meteors are rendered harmless by our atmosphere, and that the big meteors which have passed through the atmosphere have, heretofore, landed on the earth in a spot where no human being lived or had a habitation.

Smaller sized meteorites which strike the earth now and then seem to have very poor aim. There are very few well authenticated cases of a man or an animal having been struck with a meteorite, although houses have been hit by them, and there is the interesting case of Mr. Lawrence Swank, a young man seventeen years old, of Crawfordsville, Indiana.

Swank one evening last October was driving his Ford roadster along a quiet country road a few miles from his home. He was making about 20 miles an hour when suddenly there was a flash of light, a buzzing in his ears and then a loud detonation. Badly frightened, the boy raced for home, leaving the car in the street in front of the house. The next morning he was astonished to find a hole nearly as large as his fist in the hood of his roadster, and another similar one in the radiator front.

The young man's friends suggested that the car had been struck by a meteorite and he was immediately convinced that he had had this unparalleled experience. Confirmation of the meteorite theory was seen in several circumstances. Swank found a small piece of a strange metal under the car's hood. A farmer found a larger piece of what looked like burnt-out stone in a nearby field. A small dent was found in the pavement of the road just about where Swank said the meteorite struck his car. Finally, several persons reported having that night seen a "shooting star" in the sky in that vicinity.

Professor Wylie, with the aid of scientists from nearby Wabash College, investigated the reports of Swank's meteorite. While they did not actually disprove the story, they exploded the "corrobative" evidence, and their conclusions throw grave doubts on the striking of the car by a meteorite.

The large "burnt-out" object was declared to be a common cinder. The piece found in the hood was carborundum, an artificial metal. The dent in the pavement could not have been made by an object from the direction the supposed meteorite traveled. It was learned no shooting stars had actually been seen in the vicinity. The meteorite, to have pierced hood and radiator, must have fallen at an angle of 45 degrees, while all other meteorites have fallen almost vertically. Finally, Prof. Wylie, who is an authority on the subject, figured that, "assuming that one percent of the meteorites falling in the United States are now being recovered, an authentic report of damage to an auto by a meteorite anywhere in the United States should occur not oftener than about once in 500 years."

As even an Indiana Ford doesn't last that long, they would seem to be immune.

A few years ago it was reported from Calcutta that the fall of a huge meteorite near the village of Kanth, in the Jaluan district of India, had killed two men. The meteorite fell in a field where the men were working. One man was said to have been annihilated, so that no trace of his body was found.

There is also a well authenticated case of a man in Mhow, India, being killed by a meteorite in 1827. Details are meagre.

The Crater of the Gigantic Meteorite in Diablo Canyon, Arizona, Which Hides 12,000,000 Tons of Solid Iron, Nickel and Other Metals, and Which Fell From the Sky and Buried Itself in the Earth in Prehistoric Times.

Photograph of the Destruction of the Forest for Miles Around in Siberia, Where an Enormous Celestial Visitor Struck the Earth a Few Years Ago. This Picture Shows How the Air Compressed in Front of the Meteorite Rushed Out, Stripping Limbs From Trees, Tearing Them Up by the Roots and Spreading Them on the Ground in Concentric Circles. A Few Scrubby Second-Growth Trees Have Since Sprung Up.

About three years ago a baby in Japan was grazed by a small meteorite. Little Chiu Kuriyama had been placed by her mother in the safest spot she could think of, the middle of their fenced-in garden. Suddenly Mrs. Kuriyama heard screams of pain and rushing to the garden found Chiu badly hurt. The baby was bleeding from a nasty gash in the neck about two inches long. The mother could not imagine how the child got hurt. Examining her closely, however, Mrs. Kuriyama found a curious object in the baby's little pocket. It was a black, irregularly shaped bit of metal about the size of a rifle bullet. It was still hot when she picked it up.

Mr. Sei-iti Yamagimati, principal of the school and the most learned man in the village, inspected the object and declared it a meteorite. Experts at Tokio confirmed the finding and it reposes in Kyoto University. The child suffered no permanent ill effects.

In Chapter 10 of Book of Joshua is related how Joshau and the Israelites defeated the Amorites before the city of Gideon. The eleventh verse says:

"And it came to pass, as they (the Amorites) fled from before Israel, and were in the going down to Bethoron, that the Lord cast down great stones from Heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died; they were more which died with hailstones than they which the children of Israel slew with the sword."

The heavy artillery that slaughtered the fleeting Amorites is referred to as "great stones from the sky" and also as "hailstones." Modern Biblical scholars are inclined to agree with astronomers that the first of these descriptions is the right one.

The two greatest known meteorites are those which fell in Diablo Canyon, Arizona, and in the wastes of northern Siberia. The Arizona meteorite fell in prehistoric times. It struck the earth with such force that it buried itself in the ground so deeply that borings hundreds of feet deep have failed to strike the main body of the celestial visitor. The crater made in the earth at Coon Butte is today three-quarters of a mile in diameter and nearly 600 feet deep. It is estimated that the main mass of iron, nickle and other metals weighs 12,000,000 tons.

The great meteorite that came to earth in Siberia afforded scientists a much better opportunity to study the effects of these giant visitors from space.

The remains of the meteorite were scattered over an area more than two miles in diameter. This huge crater was punctured by the fragments which burst from the celestial visitor and plunged deep down into the earth and out of sight. The onward rush of the great mass of meteoric iron and other metals compressed the air in front of it. This compressed air, escaping with almost incredible power, stripped the forest trees of their branches and tore them up by their roots, stretching them on the ground in concentric circles.

So tremendous was the impact that the solid ground heaved outward in every direction in giant ridges, like waves in water. For a distance of from 10 to 15 miles around this central spot the countryside was scorched and charred as though by a gigantic blow torch. For an additional 10 or 20 miles on every side of the scorched area, making a total circle 50 to 60 miles in diameter, the great air-wave had laid down the trees in concentric circles.

The largest meteorite ever recovered is "Ahnighito," found in 1897 by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary on an island in Melville Bay, Greenland, and named for his daughter, Marie Ahnighito Peary, the "Snow Baby." It weighs 36½ tons and is on view at the American Museum of Natural History.

The "Willamette," also in the American Museum of Natural History, is not only the most extraordinary in appearance of any meteorite, but is the largest that has been found in the United States. It was discovered in 1902 about 12 miles south of Portland, Oregon. It is 10 feet long, weighs 15½ tons and is deeply pitted on one side with great hollows, many large enough to hold a child, as shown by the illustration on this page.

Among the few meteorites whose history is definitely known is the "Forest City," also shown on this page surrounded by some of the smaller fragments found with it. The main body is nearly a foot-and-a-half high.

On Friday, May 2, 1890, at 5:15 p. m., a brilliant ball of fire shot across the sky from west to east in northern Iowa, its flight being accompanied by a noise likened to that of heavy cannonading or of thunder, and by scintillations like those of fireworks. This meteor was the "Forest City." It burst when it was about 11 miles northwest of Forest City, Winnebago County, and the fragments, more than a thousand of which have been recovered, were scattered over an area of a mile wide and two miles long.

Why the Duck-Billed Savages of the Circus Were Sent Home

Children of the Jungle, Paid in Beads, They Soon Learned to Demand Money; Next They Insisted on Shoes and Polished Them for Hours; Delighted With the White Man's Plumbing They Took Endless Shower Baths— But When the Witch Doctor Chief Began to Talk About His Death Magic and Secret Poisons and Their Keeper Died With a Mysterious Red Spot; Then They Were Hustled Back to Africa

How a Ubangi Lady Eats Her Dinner.

Duck-Billed Belles Smoking and Drinking, in Spite of Their Overgrown Lips.

Dr. Eugene Bergonier, Who Brought the Savages From Their Home in the Jungle—and Is Believed by Many to Have Been Killed by the Witch-Doctor's Poison.

Front and Side View of a Circus Beauty of the Ubangi Tribe.

Chief M'Bulongwe, Witch-Doctor and Leader of the Circus Savages From Central Africa. He Demanded a Cap, Overcoat and Trousers, and Was Highly Delighted With His First Pair of Shoes Which He Polished Industriously for Hours at a Time.

THE Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus has finished its usual opening weeks of the season at Madison Square Garden in New York, and is now touring the country "on the road." And every man, woman and child, from the manager down to the employees who clean out the animal cages, is thankful that the troupe of African jungle savages, the "duck-billed" women and their husbands, are not with the show this year.

Not only were these primitive children of the bush an infernal nuisance all the time, but everybody was afraid of M'Bulongwe, the African chief and witch-doctor. By the rules of the tribe, he held the power of life and death over all members of the little group of twelve savages, and they never doubted that he could put any one of them "on the spot" by a magic spell.

But that was not all. The men and women of the tribe spread the news that he carried with him a poison which was quick and certain in any case where his magic and witchcraft failed to work. It was this unpleasant knowledge which worried the circus outfit very much as if they had been told that there was a poisonous snake loose somewhere in the tents or wagons. And, indeed, there is very little doubt among the circus company that the rascally witch-doctor used his jungle poison on Dr. Eugene Bergonier, the French traveler and explorer who brought the Ubangi natives to the United States and looked after them during their circus tour.

There were twelve of these Ubangi, eight of them women who were all married to some one of the four men, though nobody ever straightened out whose wives were which. There were complications enough without that. They were one of the greatest attractions the circus has ever had. Nothing like them had ever been seen in this country before and for good reasons probably never will be again.

The women are called "duck-billed" because it is the style of the tribe for girls, at the age of four, to start distending their lips with little pieces of wood, a process that is continued with bigger pieces until, in their late twenties, they are often able to carry a wooden disk a foot in diameter in their lower lips and one half as big in their upper. When they talk these disks hit together with a sound suggestive of the quacking of ducks. They have been called the original "lip-stick" ladies.

Dr. Bergonier had received these human curiosities as a loan from the Government of France, to which the tribe's territory, near Lake Chad, belongs. In making the deal with the natives themselves, there had been no talk of money because money has not yet penetrated that deep into the jungle. These blacks would not have known what it meant nor have been interested in the promise of a million dollars. However, glass beads, ten-cent store perfumes and necklaces were treasures they could appreciate and, on this basis, they were allowed to name their own terms.

The transactions between the explorer and the Ubangi were done through M'Bulongwe, their chief and witch-doctor, who guaranteed that the others would obey him because he had power of life and death over them. It turned out that this was true enough but the trouble was to make M'Bulongwe behave. Dr. Bergonier could not speak much of the Ubangi tongue and had to rely for an interpreter on his personal servant Hamad, a little, coal-black Senegalese.

This faithful fellow became terrified when he learned that M'Bulongwe was going along. The witch-doctor was a mean man, there surely would be trouble and he thought nothing of killing with his magic anyone who opposed him.

Dr. Bergonier had told Hamad not to worry because magic would not harm anyone who did not believe in it and he didn't. Bergonier knew, however, that these voodoo practicers, when their magic fails, resort to other methods but he thought he could handle them too.

Things were quiet enough coming over on the ship and the stay at Madison Square Garden passed without many difficulties, but then the troubles began. The Ubangi were delighted at first at the flattering interest of the New York crowds but soon became homesick and, at the end of the engagement at Madison Square Garden demanded to be taken back to Africa. This was contrary to the agreement and the circus would not hear of losing their star attraction. So, after the last New York performance Dr. Bergonier hired three taxi cabs for his charges and with Hamad in a fourth, followed them to the circus train which was waiting in Harlem.

Of course it would have been useless to ask any hotel or boarding house to take in a crowd of wild savages, but a circus, from long experience, is resourceful in such matters. It knows where to find accommodations for anything from a hippopotamus to a rattlesnake, and it rented space in an empty warehouse. There, on a concrete floor, covered with blankets and surrounded with bare brick walls, the Ubangi camped. On the boat the women had been taught to cook their fish and rice on little oil stoves such as Russian housewives use, instead of wood fires, and on the train they would have, all to themselves, a car with barred windows like a lion cage.

The warehouse owner had charged a high price on the theory that such wild people would be dirty and he would have to disinfect the place. They proved to be just the opposite, and in the end carried cleanliness to a point where it ceased to be a virtue. In the warehouse, however, their only damage was the wearing out of a lot of brooms and scrubbing brushes, things they had never seen before, in their interminable scrubbing and brushing of the perfectly clean floor.

When Dr. Bergonier's cab reached the train he found his twelve savages jabbering on the sidewalk and their three drivers watching them from a safe distance. All the way up the Ubangi had been beating on the windows and yelling something at the terrified drivers. Hamad now explained that it had been orders to drive them to a ship, any ship at all, because they wanted to go home.

They were finally pursuaded to enter their private car, but at each stop there was a new rebellion which Dr. Bergonier had to suppress in one way or another. In New York the Ubangi had become money conscious. The witch-doctor had been given the job of selling picture post cards of his duck-billed beauties and taught to make change up to a dollar. Until that time he had thought money was like tickets, bills and baggage checks, just a part of the white man's red tape. Now he observed that these little pieces of metal had a high value in the white man's eyes. Why were they so sacred and why did Dr. Bergonier take his day's receipts away from him each night?

He made Hamad, who feared him as much as any of the Ubangi, explain. These were the things that the white men worked all the week to collect. If one had enough he could buy anything in New York, even the big buildings and glass beads. M'Bulongwe promptly insisted on keeping every cent he took in after that, and that Dr. Bergonier supply him with cards free, otherwise the twelve would not appear.

It was done and the Ubangi carried back to Africa every dime that passed into the witch-doctor's palm. In Chicago they became clothes conscious, which was worse. The duck-billed ladies had been fascinated by the clothes of the women who stared at them and clamored to be dressed the same way. The chief could have shut them up with a word, but he and the other men had gotten interested in masculine attire and there was another revolt. The Frenchman bought four suits of $22.50 clothes, with an extra pair of pants, shoes, shirts, neckties and derby hats for the males and looked up a bargain sale of cheap dresses for the women, together with high-heeled slippers, silk stockings and "angel-face" hats that were just then going out of style. Fortunately nobody had told them about lingerie. The result was a sight for the gods but everybody was happy.

Not for long, however. The Ubangi were so pleased with their new outfits that they insisted on wearing it all at the circus instead of their native costume consisting of only a loin cloth. This demand was impossible and the explorer had his first serious quarrel with the witch-doctor. From then on Hamad began to fear for his master's life and to pass his fears along to the rest of the circus folk. Finally the trouble was compromised by letting the Africans wear something on their feet. Of all the white folks' clothes, shoes fascinated these savages the most.

All their spare time the male Ubangi had been polishing and repolishing their shoes and the females had been getting cramps in their calves from learning to walk on the high heels. The men's shoes had to be squeaky and M'Bulongwe's had to be the squeakiest of all. Such footgear on almost naked savages would be ridiculous and so Dr. Bergonier bought twelve pairs of gaudy Indian moccasins.

Immediately there was another riot because they were all alike and the witch-doctor, being their chief, must have something fancier that the rest. He got it, but still there was discontent. The wretched moccasins could not be made to squeak nor shine no matter how hard they tried. They felt they had been swindled.

This moccasin question caused such a fuss one Saturday, in Chicago, that almost by force the twelve had to be crowded into a van, the doors locked and the turbulent blacks driven to the circus. But M'Bulongwe had learned something else about clothes. While Dr. Bergonier would not let them appear in full white-folk's attire, he was, for some reason which they could not understand, even more insistent that they must wear that little loin cloth. Very well, just for that, they would all take it off and see what he would do about it. When the doors of the truck were opened out burst twelve yelling and stark naked Ubangi. The consternation was all that the witch-doctor had hoped for.

For a while their minds were diverted from shoes to another nuisance. As already mentioned, they were exemplary as far as cleanliness is concerned and properly enough asked and received one or two baths each day. As long as these were in a tub they were pleased at having both hot and cold water pour in miraculously at the turn of a tap, but they were not immoderate in their demands until one unlucky day they discovered a shower bath. Except for squeaky and high-heeled shoes nothing in America delighted these Africans like that simple invention. From then on they all had to have about three hours under the showers every week day and much more on Sundays.

M'Bulongwe discovered that Dr. Bergonier was paid for their appearances and demanded that all the money be given to him. The trouble over that became so serious that Hamad warned his master that the witch-doctor had started the death-magic against him. The explorer pretended to laugh but he knew that unless he died the witch-doctor would lose his reputation. The Frenchman was careful to keep at a distance from M'Bulongwe and to see that he could not get at his food. With these precautions he thought he was safe.

He managed to escape till the end of the season, when the circus was on its way to Florida Winter quarters. Then a red spot and a spreading inflammation appeared on his leg, followed by a fever. In a few days, in spite of all the doctors could do, he died of what was called pneumonia.

The witch-doctor insisted on having all the Ubangi see and touch him as he lay cold in death. The dying man said from the first that he was doomed and that it would have happened anyhow on the way back on the boat. Hamad's peculiar behavior after the spot appeared convinced the circus people that the witch-doctor terrorized the Senegalese into touching his master's leg as he slept with the point of a poisoned thorn. The Ubangi were promptly shipped home and Hamad went with them. If they ever tour with the circus again that witch-doctor will not be with them.

Secrets of London's Most Notorious Night Club

The Countess of Kinnoull, Titled Daughter of Mrs. Meyrick, and Manager of Her Mother's Often-Raided Supper and Dance Resorts, Reveals Episodes Behind the Scenes With the Rich and Fashionable Patrons

NEXT to Her Majesty the Queen, perhaps no woman's name is better known in London than Mrs. Kate Meyrick, proprietor of several famous night-clubs, and who has three times served a prison term for defying the law of serving liquor and keeping open after hours.

And while the illustrious mother was in her prison seclusion, Miss May Meyrick, her daughter, managed the clubs.

In these most exciting meeting grounds of the upper circles and the underworld, where champagne splashes the walls and there is enough ice in the cocktail shakers to take care of a fever hospital, Miss May met and soon married Lord Kinnoull, thus the Night Club Queen's daughter became a member of the British Peerage; indeed, another daughter, Miss Dorothy Meyrick, also married a Peer, Lord de Clifford.

"Lady May," the Countess of Kinnoull, has lived in the artificial glitter of night club life ever since she graduated from fashionable Roedean School, and knows everybody of wealth and title in and out of England. She has met the best and the worst of people, and has watched the ebb and flow of life and the whirlpools of intrigue, dissipation and scandal which sometimes cast the victims into the divorce courts, financial ruin or a suicide's grave.

The Countess of Kinnoull now draws aside the curtain of secrecy and reveals many extraordinary incidents in the famous night-clubs owned and managed by Mrs. Meyrick and herself.

Molly pretended to have had too much champagne at the club to dare to go home, and thus she persuaded Lord D. to take her to his apartment. Suddenly the bell rang and an actress friend of Molly's, who, strangely enough, occupied the apartment overhead, stood at the door as His Lord ship, in his pajamas, answered the bell.

"I'm terribly sorry to trouble you," she said. "I've just got home from a party and when I got upstairs I found my one and only clock had stopped. Do be a dear and tell me the time."

Just then a radiant vision, in something that must have cost a lot in one of the Rue de la Paix lingerie shops, stepped forth from another bedroom into the hall of the flat, in full view of the lady at the door.

"Molly!" screamed the actress, "by all that's miraculous, how long has this been going on? May I come in?"

CHAPTER I.

© 1931 by American Weekly, Inc. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

I WILL never forget the look of astonishment on the real estate agent's face when my mother, Mrs. Kate Meyrick, said: "This will do nicely."

The three of us were standing with flickering candles, among the puddles on the cellar floor of an old provision store at 43 Gerrard Street, about 300 yards from Piccadilly Circus, London. The aged building smelled of dampness, oil, boxwood, decaying odds and ends of vegetables, mixed with many other odors. The agent thought Mother must be crazy to hope she could make a successful night club from such forbidding premises. I almost thought so, too.

But Mother had the imagination of genius. In her nostrils was already the alluring scent that is only to be bought in tiny fifty-dollar bottles. Where the man and I saw only rats and mildew, she visioned what was indeed to come, the most famous night club in the world, a throng of Dukes, Earls, Princes, Baronets, millionaires from America, celebrities from everywhere, royalty, and—most important of all—the women.

They are what count, beautiful, brilliant creatures, eager eyes aglint with champagne and that stronger stimulant, the hunting instinct. Most of all Mother saw these in her mind, for they are the mainspring, the prime mover of the successful night club, these hunting women, hunting for wealth, titles, social position. So compelling is that hunting instinct that when these huntresses have captured what they want in the form of a husband it is hard for them to stop. Often as not, these Dianas turn around and hunt another, no better.

Mother visioned all this, including a titled husband for me, her daughter, and even that was fulfilled. Finally the agent managed to say the only favorable thing he could, that it was a good location.

"Yes," Mother replied, "and that is all, except the four walls. But out of this sow's ear I will make a silk purse."

And she did, a purse from which flowed much gold and a fame that spread from Asia to the Argentine. I helped Mother run that "43 Club" and really believe it was one of the most fascinating places in the world. Few people understand the fascination they sometimes find in one of these resorts, for there are clubs and clubs. Some miss it entirely and, to quote Shakespeare, are "Like a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." In such places it is almost pathetic to watch the guests trying to get into the spirit of the thing and wondering why they can't.

There is an old joke about an American who called a suave night-club waiter to his table and asked:

"Am I having a good time?"

That might really have happened in some clubs, but not at the "43," because it was always electric with the thrill of the hunt, a happy hunting ground for women. The men are happy to be hunted, though their happiness is sometimes short-lived, after they are caught. Many males, even in this enlightened day, still fondly imagine they are the hunters. What romances, divorces, tragedies, stratagems and sons of Britain's oldest and most aristocratic families strangely altered, those who should and those who should not, fall under the mating spell, romances and mesalliances flower and explode and strange madness grip more than one of Europe's most staid and respected personalities in that cellar once infested by rats. Truly indeed, "Beauty is in the eye of the beholder," and I might almost say, virtue, too. Under certain circumstances men will make a Venus out of a Gorgon, a Madonna out of a Magdalen and also a Magdalen out of a Madonna.

Outside, we changed nothing except to repaint in blue the door and window surroundings. There is no glittering awning nor spread of electric lamps to distinguish the "43 Club" from its surroundings. The large windows, like those of any ordinary restaurant, are plain and curtains prevent one from seeing through them.

Inside the doorway in the passage is the office, where guests and visitors sign in and pay the entrance fees. The cloakrooms are on this floor towards the back and then facing are the stairs leading down to the one-time cellar, now the dance room.

Several night club proprietors had looked at the premises before Mother did, and they had turned them down as impossible. Mother saw farther than they did. She made that cellar into a room with large mirrors on the walls, a perfect dancing floor, a band platform at the far end from the foot of the stairs, an alcove at the other end, and, of course, tables around the dancing floor. Ventilation was our greatest problem, and before she had finished Mother spent several thousand dollars on this alone.

That, then, is the "43 Club," the foundation of the many enterprises of my mother in the night club business and of her reputation—perhaps more widely known than any in the world—as "The Night Club Queen." It was the forerunner of those other clubs, such as "The Little" in Golden Square, which I came to manage on my own, and "The Manhattan" and "The Broadway."

For myself, I got into the limelight both as Miss May Meyrick and as Countess of Kinnoull. As assistant to my mother in running the clubs and as a girl, who, after being educated at Roedean, the feminine equivalent of Eton in England, later married a peer with five titles. That surprised some people.

We had our club; the next thing was to get patrons. The quick and obvious way, of course, was a big electric light sign and plenty of advertising. This would have brought the curious Tom, Dick and Harry, but we would have had just another ordinary night club, full of nobodies. As I have said, we did nothing to distinguish the outside of the house except to exhibit the number. The psychology of this, of course, was to give the general public the correct impression that it was not wanted, that the club was as exclusive as Buckingham Palace, and, in some ways, it was. Mother never kept "open house."

As nothing is more depressing than an almost empty night club, we were faced with the problem of being exclusive and yet filled up, though nobody knew about us. This was achieved by starting in as a subscription supper and dance resort. Mother engaged an ex-army officer, installed in a little office across the street, where arrangements were made and tickets sold. The dances were great successes, because Mother made them so. Everyone went away feeling that they had discovered a place where joy was unconfined, and yet things did not quite go too far. It takes the finest judgment and most adroit management to draw the line.

The fame of the place spread in just the right way, everyone telling it as a discovery of his own and there were other ways. Social secretaries of the elite, if approached in the right way, are useful. Between the dances, much as we needed the cash, nobody could get in for love or money, but there was always someone at the door to make note of how many and how important these would-be guests were. They were turned away with the impression that something unspeakably exclusive was going on inside.

When my mother judged that the stream of these callers was sufficiently large she opened the place as a full-fledged night club but exclusive to the Nth degree. When a car stopped at the curb, a signal brought Mother or me to the peephole, and while the door guardian engaged the arrivals in conversation, we studied them and gave the guardian a secret yes or no signal. Men and women with titles and great wealth were astonished to find that they could not get in unless we knew them personally or someone already inside would vouch for them. To be welcome at No. 43 soon became something to boast about.

The more difficult we made it, the more persons who had the entree to everything in Mayfair insisted on their right to come in unchallenged and, of course, we recognized their rights. Yet, at the start, they all had to bring their own liquor just as in the land of prohibition. Later we got a liquor license.

It was not long before the 43 became the resort of half the society folk in the West End of London and gradually I got to know not only the names and faces of all kinds of celebrities but a vast deal about their affairs as well.

When the most highly placed people in London wanted to cease being decorous, when they were tired of the stodginess of Mayfair mansions and wanted to make whoopee and hit the high spots, they voted for the "43" as the place to go to.

In England we have a child's game called "Grab." It consists of getting hold of as many of your opponents' cards as you can. I have seen it played in everyone of our night clubs, but instead of cards they played with husbands and wives. Unmarried women trying to grab a husband; if the man happened to be someone else's already, it didn't matter in the least. Married women, tired of one husband, trying to grab a second one, especially if he had a better position and more money than their present husband.

As an example of the latter type, take Molly, the Honorable Mrs. G. When she began to come down to the "43 Club" and The Manhattan she was the pretty, little, blonde wife of the younger son of an earl. She had started her career in the back row of a revue chorus and she had decided to end up in the front row of Society.

Molly had done pretty well for herself, probably as well as she had any right to hope, and she should have been content, or, at least, have been cautious about risking the bird she had in hand for bigger and better ones on the bush. It is, in my opinion, based on watching the game night after night, that one of the main weaknesses of my sex is overconfidence.

Just because Molly had captivated an earl's younger son, she was quite sure she could catch anybody. Therefore, she looked upon her husband as merely a stepping stone to higher and nobler mates. In two years this once obscure chorus girl had come to consider herself above the mere title of "The Honorable Mrs. G." and felt she ought to be "Lady Something or other." Nothing less than a lord would satisfy her.

I saw the hunting light in Molly's eye as her devoted husband led her into the club. Before the night was over she had met and sufficiently impressed Lord D. so that he soon met her there again, unembarrassed by her husband's presence. That husband may have identified Lord D. and introduced them, but there were other ways. When a lady goes to the ladies' room of a night club she may have more important things on her mind than powdering her nose. There are telephones in that room and the attendants, for a consideration, will find out for her who's who, who he is with among the other guests and why. The information is collected from the waiters, the door man, the professional dancing partners and sometimes even from the taxi drivers.

This intelligence department is necessary in a well-run club to prevent unpleasant scenes. No man, on entering, likes to say:

"I don't want my wife to know I am out with this lady. If she comes, let me know so we can slip out."

It is our business to know that anyway and, should necessity arise, to perform that service for our patron unasked. Before she took steps to meet Lord D., Molly undoubtedly knew that he was 54 years old, 20 years her senior, that he was blessed with heaps of money and had just been divorced by his wife after a little affair in Deauville with a world-famous dancer. Molly's husband, being in the army, happened just then to be sent to Cairo, which left the coast clear for her to work on Lord D., which she did with visible success.

She danced every night with D., and Molly could dance, of course. It was what she had been trained to by an old aunt who had been a dancer herself and who saw in Molly a nice comfortable means of income for her old age.

D. opened up his pocket as well as his heart to Molly. One night I met her in the cloakroom, I noticed her wearing a truly wonderful pearl necklace. She saw my eyes on it.

"Isn't it a beauty, Miss Meyrick?" she said. "Freddy gave it to me." Freddy, I understood, was Lord D.

I kept an interested eye on them that night. About midnight D. had got all lit up with wine. He was dancing with Molly and holding her as I imagine a grizzly bear would hold his female partner or his worst enemy. Molly was one of the girls who do not believe in leaving much to the imagination in the way of garb. No armor casing in her make-up. D. was having the time of his middle-aged life, and Molly knew it, saw to it that the spell continued and decided to strike while the iron was hot.

About three o'clock in the morning, I glanced over at the table where they sat and I was surprised to see that while D. had become comparatively sober, Molly now appeared very much the opposite. I had never seen her like that before. She was that kind of girl who let other people empty their glasses while she kept her own standing so the waiter could not refill it.

Later I remembered that at the moment this had struck me as a bit queer. I knew Molly would stop at nothing to land the owner of this title and wealth in her net, but she was too shrewd to think intoxication was a helpful method. Sober women lead intoxicated husbands to the altar who would shy at it in their sober senses, but intoxicated women don't get very far in that direction. However, I had other things to distract my attention and only hoped she would not get any worse.

At last the pair got up and Molly clutched hard at D's arm to steady herself and leaned on him while they left the room. I followed her to the cloakroom and stood aside while the attendant helped her to put on her cloak. Then I noticed that she seemed to have sobered up very suddenly. That struck me as queer again. She caught my glance and immediately she went all floppy again.

At the door Lord D. came up and to me aside he said: "Miss Meyrick, Molly seems to have had enough for one night, I'm wondering what I'd better do about her. What do you think?"

"Take her to her home," I said. "And I should do so as quickly as possible." I was not anxious that she should stay any longer in the club. I had doubts about the genuineness of her "illuminated" condition but, in any case, it was good advice and there would have been no trouble if he had followed it. But he didn't, and so, four months later, the list of divorce actions showed that Molly's husband was divorcing her and naming Lord D. as co-respondent. This was exactly what Molly had wanted to happen and yet the next time I saw her she lacked that glorified cat-that-has-eaten-the-canary expression I looked for. In fact she looked right down-hearted. This is what had happened.

Molly and D. went off that night in a taxi from the club. They had not gone far when Molly, with her head on the Earl's shoulder and with a lot of seeming difficulty in speech had said:

"Freddy dear, I can't go home. I won't go home. Auntie would kill me if she saw me like . . . like this. I know I'm tight. Auntie is awful about drinkin'. When she came to stay with me after Bobby went to Egypt, she wanted to make me go tee-total. Freddy, what'm I goin' to do? Oh, listen, dear old thing, tell you what. Put me up for the night at your flat. No one'll know. You're alone."

Lord D. didn't take to the idea at all at first. But Molly's blonde head drooping on his shoulder, Molly's seemingly hopeless plight and her reiterated terror at what "auntie might say or do" got him to agree at last. He took her to his flat in a big block near Park Lane, where he lived alone except for a valet who came each morning and went away at night.

There should not really have been any danger either to D's or Molly's reputation. Molly was given a spare room into which she flopped, seemingly not recovered from her "night out."

Now was it just a strange coincidence that an actress who was a particular friend of Molly's should have had the flat above D's? I can't say definitely. At any rate, at five in the morning the bell of D's flat rang. He went to the door and found his actress-neighbor on the landing.

"I'm terribly sorry to trouble you," she said. "I've just got home from a party and when I got upstairs I found my one and only clock had stopped. Do be a dear and tell me the time."

Lord D., half asleep, went shuffling back in his pajamas to his bedroom to consult his watch. Just then a radiant vision, in something that must have cost a lot in one of the Rue de la Paix lingerie shops, stepped forth from another bedroom into the hall of the flat, in full view of the lady at the door.

"Molly!" screamed the actress, "by all that's miraculous, how long has this been going on? May I come in?"

As nobody was there to stop her, she did go in. Lord D. was most unhappy over the situation, but since the girls were such good old friends, he felt sure that word of the compromising situation need go no further. However, it went far and fast to Cairo and the actress was the chief witness in Mr. G's divorce suit. How that happened I will give masculine readers three guesses, feminine ones will need only one.

Poor old Lord D. guessed right, too, or someone of another sex put him right. Anyway, as soon as the divorce papers were served on him, he packed up and departed for a prolonged lion hunt in Africa. The big cats, he decided, were not the most dangerous ones. As for Molly, she "fell between two stools" as the saying goes and is now neither Lady D. nor even Mrs. G. The last time I saw her she was a professional dancing partner in a London night club, not one of ours, let me say.

Molly was still a-hunting but with a somewhat discouraged eye. Everybody has heard about her little misadventure which makes things hard for Molly. "Surely in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird."

Again permit me to speak from my abundant observation. Men are indeed astonishingly gullible in letting women pull the wool over their eyes. But rarely are they as stupid as they appear and I will tell you why.

If a man is in love with a woman or even if he is not but is married to her and she tells him something he suspects is a falsehood, what can he do? He must either pretend to accept the statement at face value or imply a doubt—but to imply a doubt means that she will challenge his doubt, for a woman can be relied upon to make such a thing a personal issue with emotional fireworks and in a moment he has about the same situation on his hands as if he had called her a liar. Few men will precipitate such a scene without proof, and their pretending to believe confirms the women in their idea that they can get away with anything.

But the doubt remains, and he slowly adds new ones to the score. It is almost incredible how many straws it takes to break the camel's back, but nobody is more surprised than the woman herself when she lays on the last and fatal straw, perhaps the smallest of all, and sees him reach for his hat.

Sad examples like Molly, who get nothing for their grabbing but burned fingers, do not discourage the others who have before their eyes the rich prizes which the more successful carry off in triumph. In Clapham, known to the fashionable world for its railroad junction and little else except its crowded and narrow streets, lived two young sisters, daughters of a small inkeeper. Having neither money, clothes, social background nor friends except laborers, there seemed no chance for either of those girls even to get into the night-life hunting ground, much less to capture anything in it.

Except for being healthy and fairly good-looking, the pair had no assets or advantages. But once more they proved that you can't keep down a person with real ambition. Those two lowly maidens managed to become Princesses without the help of any fairy godmother. One of them made her grab right under my nose in the "43 Club," the other before she got there.

The older sister read that Prince Luis of Bourbon, a relative of the King of Spain, was staying at a hotel in Folkstone. With such little money as she could borrow, the girl bought just one good outfit of clothes, went to that hotel and went to that hotel. She had learned from the papers that this Prince Luis was about the most disreputable and outrageous man of any prominence in Europe. He was so abominable that King Alfonso banished him from Spain, declared his titles forfeit and forbade anyone to mention Luis' name in the Royal presence.

Luis, however, kept right on "wearing his titles" and outside of his native country nobody seemed to question them much. But when his morals became so depraved that France took exception to them also, the world realized that he must be rather dubious material for a husband. The publican's daughter knew all this but she saw that he was still called Prince Luis of Bourbon. Furthermore, he was a Catholic and therefore could never divorce her—IF she could only marry him. What an IF.

It seemed impossible for a strange girl without even a change of clothes or enough money to stay more than two days at the hotel to win and woo a Prince. But "faint heart ne'er won fair lady" and the principle is true of the feminine sex when it goes awooing. Without much trouble she recognized His Highness by his pictures and the first day followed him around unobserved, waiting for an opportunity to grab him. That evening, she saw him sit down alone near the corner of the veranda. At once the girl scampered around, took a seat the other side of the corner and began to sob loudly.

Prince Luis, hearing feminine weeping, investigated and beheld a rather well-dressed young girl apparently sobbing her heart out in the moonlight. The notorious rake, then about 35 years old, was enough interested to ask what was the matter. She sobbed out that her parents were cruel, she had run away from home, herself. Luis expressed sympathy, pulled her fists out of her eyes, enough to see that she was rather goodlooking and expressed more sympathy. This seemed to touch her for she impulsively threw her arms around him and wept on his manly pigeon breast.

Luis was an exile and in disgrace. His family had turned its back on him, he was lonely for the moment and it pleased him to comfort and pet the young weeper. After a while he came to desire the girl, whom he called "Niobe," because she was all tears, and invited her up to his room.

No, Niobe was a good girl and would not do anything like that, but she was bent on jumping in the ocean because nobody loved her. Luis then told her who he was, but, to his surprise, that did not seem to make any difference. Most all night she wept and he petted and pleaded without avail. At 4 a. m. he left her, after obtaining a promise not to commit suicide until he had seen her again that morning. In the course of the day they were married.

Stranger things have happened, but not many.

For about a month she made him take her about the night clubs, including, of course, the "43," where I saw them often. She managed to get herself thoroughly introduced as the Princess of Bourbon and then the Bourbon family woke up, reached a long and powerful arm across the Channel, seized their scapegrace scion and locked him up in a mental hospital on the Continent. They could not procure a divorce, but they did get the marriage annulled.

That incongruous romance was over, but for a while she had been a Princess and was still a relative by an annulled marriage to the King of Spain. Her temporary husband was the most notorious member of any royal family, but, ill-smelling though it might be, the perfume of the title "Princess" lingered on. She had become a real personage in London's night life. American millionaires especially were proud to sit at the same table with a near-Bourbon and annulled relative of a reigning King. The glamor of it even brought her sister into such prominence that she was able to marry an Egyptian Prince, who later committed suicide, but left her a more or less permanent Princess in good standing. The sister's grabbing I saw done right under my nose at the "43 Club."

There, too, Niobe set her cap at Lord Kinnoull, my present husband, to whom I was not then engaged. He was not really interested, just curious, so nothing came of that. The late Avery Hopwood, famous American playwright, became much interested, not in Niobe's looks, but in her audacious and ambitious character, which had moved the girl to make her successful flying leap at a young Prince who should have seemed as inaccessible to her as the moon. Hopwood told me he meant to make her the central character in a new play, but after due thought decided that nobody would believe such a character was real. Later, she withdrew from night life, and, I am told, married a wealthy Australian sheep owner. Anything is possible in that game of husband-grabbing.

Among the grabbers there was always a type which Mother and I called the "cold vamp." The cold ones, like any other kind, might or might not have a heart of stone beneath their dainty corsage. This specimen I am about to tell about had a tender and self-sacrificing heart. She was cold only in the sense that men did not attract her.

It is well known that women may be technically beautiful in feature, complexion and form and yet lack that mysterious something known as sex-appeal or "IT." Also, women who have scarcely a feature that even a lover would call beautiful, are sometimes packed full of that valuable attraction. But all men and most women have the notion that because a woman is heavily charged with the fascinating appeal she must be a warm and passionate creature. This ought to be true, but I happen to know that it is not. Some of the most effective vamps I have ever seen would have much preferred to have been old maids, but cruel Fate frustrated their ambition.

On evening while Mother was upstairs on duty as immigration inspectress at the peephole, I was straightening out a little misunderstanding about the size of a check when a sudden silence made me realize that something was wrong. It was between dances and the band was quiet for the moment, but all the chink and rattle of eating and drinking had ceased, every waiter had frozen in his tracks, every woman was speechless. I whirled around, prepared to see anything from an archangel to the devil himself, though neither could have gotten past Mother without proper introduction from the right people.

What I beheld was a couple descending the stairs. The man was just a middle-aged, wealthy engineer, in no way interesting or unusual. With him was one of the most breath-taking beauties I ever knew. She had copper-colored hair, a skin of milk and roses, the figure of a manikin, but above and beyond all this she radiated IT. Every woman was stunned with the same thought—that here was some one who could take any man away from her without effort. A glance at the men's faces confirmed the impression.

As soon as they had time to recover their faculties, every man in the room began to make plans to dance with the newcomer, but her escort saw to it that they did nothing of the kind. He might not have succeeded so well if all the other women had not ably assisted him in his policy of seclusion. This was repeated every evening for a week, and during that time Mother and I had become quite well acquainted with them on account of their exclusiveness toward the others. Of course, the man was head over heels in love—he would have been a queer one if he hadn't been. One evening he explained to me that Miss R. was an orphan and that he was being a father to her. This was said with a laugh to show that he was not trying to fool me.

That same night I happened to see the engineer lean over his table and try to kiss his lovely companion, but she decisively repulsed him. Later she approached me in the cloak room, evidently thinking the incident called for an explanation, and said:

"I hope you won't take any notice of what you saw at the table, Miss Meyrick. It was only that Charlie was trying to be a little too loving. He's a good sort and he's been awfully kind to me. As a matter of fact, I don't mind telling you between ourselves, he's given me about $1,500 worth of presents up till now in jewelry."

"Don't worry about what happened at the table," I told her. "It has nothing to do with me and, in any case, I don't take any notice here of things like that." But as I spoke, I could not help noticing that she had not a scrap of jewelry on her except one little pendant which certainly was worth nothing near $1,500. I wondered to myself what she did with those presents, because, in my experience, most girls who go to night clubs are only too anxious to wear all the jewelry they can to outdo the others.

I got the explanation from Miss R. herself. She had come to an arrangement with a West End jeweler that she would take anyone to him who wanted to buy her a present. Then she would return the article later and get the money for it, less 10 per cent commission to the jeweler. I came to hear that in six months this girl—who, mind you, was the quietest and most prudish thing imaginable in her own home and kept her small house running like a Baptist churchwoman—had collected over $20,000 worth of jewelry which she had handed back to the shop and received cash for.

This sounds like a greedy and sordid case of gold digging at its worst, but it was not. Her father, a man with a big income, had placated his wife by letting her spend every cent and then had inconsiderately died. Finding herself penniless, the mother had folded her hands and entered a sanitarium for life. This left Miss R. to take care of her expenses and those of her two young brothers at Eton. Miss R. would like to have become a librarian or some other nice old-maidish job, but she did the only thing that would furnish $5,000 a year for the boys and take care of Mamma. So there she was, a frigid but successful vamp, feared and admired by all the others.

I mentioned this phenomenon to an Edinburgh professor. Of course, a professor or any other learned man, when he puts on evening clothes, talks piffle like the rest, but that is because he knows it is expected of him. For some unaccountable reason, only poets, novelists, playwrights, painters and sculptors are allowed to "talk shop" in society.

"The existence of this type is a known scientific fact," said the professor.

"You mean to say that solemn science has taken time to study such frivolous things as vamps?" I bantered.

"Certainly," said he, "any subject is a proper study for science and a theory has been worked out to account for the seeming anomaly of a cold woman being surcharged with appeal for the opposite sex."

The professor gave due credit to several learned German investigators whose names I have duly forgotten and then went on:

"Nature cares nothing for the individual, only for species. If a woman lacks things that tend to make her have children, she is not likely to be represented in the next generation and her kind soon dies out of the race. Women in the past, who had no desire to mate, tended to eliminate themselves, which is why today the normal woman is born with a natural dread of being an old maid.

"But when a girl happens to be born with beauty and an overpowering amount of sex-appeal, no matter how cold she might be, there was small chance to escape the pursuit of the young men and her parents' pressure to marry well. Finally, in despair, she would choose one of the suitors in order to get rid of the others and being unhampered by emotion, she probably chose well. That is why the type still persists."

Superstition and the belief in omens that bring good and bad luck are, I believe, as strong today as they were five thousand years ago or even earlier. They say that women are more superstitious than men, but I have my doubts about that. Gamblers all believe in omens. They think it is good luck to meet a red-headed girl, an idiot, a piebald horse, a hunchback, a white cat or a dwarf. They think it is equally bad luck to meet a whistling girl, a crow flying east, a cross-eyed man, a black cat, a one-horned cow or a chimney sweep. Some of them carry with them purple glass pigs and many other mascots.

Some of the leading fashionable women of London have just held a pageant of the superstitions in which they all believe more or less. Beautiful Lady Hamilton Grant gave a striking representation of the superstition about spilling the salt, which goes back to the days of the Roman Empire. The Hon. Mrs. Evan Morgan gave a very attractive impersonation of the opal, that notoriously unlucky stone. Miss Betty Hulton, daughter of Sir Edward Hulton, enacted the peculiar superstition that crossed table knives mean misfortune. The Hon. Mrs. Roland Cubitt went as the still more peculiar superstition that three candles burning in a bunch bring terrible disaster. Most of the other old superstitions were there very charmingly impersonated, and the returns went to charity.

Wherever there is much wine, woman and song there will come tragedy. Next week I will tell of a triple tragedy that trailed through the "43 Club."

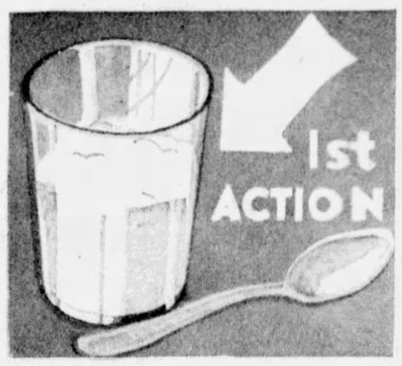
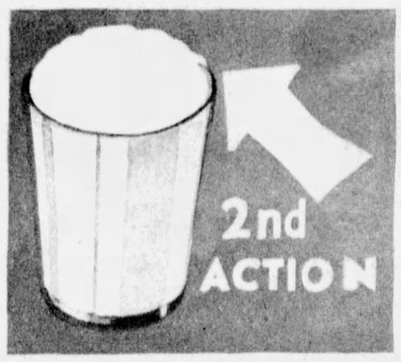
Here's why . . CALUMET'S DOUBLE-ACTION!





SCIENCE SHOWS YOU HOW CALUMET ACTS TWICE

Make this test—See for yourself how Calumet Baking Powder acts twice to make your baking better. Put two level teaspoons of Calumet into a glass, add two teaspoons of water, stir rapidly five times and remove the spoon. The tiny, fine bubbles will rise slowly, half filling the glass. This is Calumet's first action—the action that Calumet specially provides to take place in the mixing bowl.

After the mixture has entirely stopped rising, stand the glass in a pan of hot water on the stove. In a moment, a second rising will start and continue until the mixture reaches the top of the glass. This is Calumet's second action—the action that Calumet holds in reserve to take place in the heat of your oven. Make this test to-day. See Calumet's Double-Action which protects your baking from failure.

BAKING experts—professional cake makers—housewives who make prize-winning cakes—they couldn't be wrong! They know the secrets of perfect baking! And when so many of them say—use Calumet, The Double-Acting Baking Powder—there must be a reason.

There is! For Calumet's remarkable Double-Action makes cakes and quick breads that are gems of perfection! Not just ordinarily good—but superlatively good! Prize-winning perfect! Even if you're a beginner, feel as confident as a professional when you use Calumet. Your baking is bound to succeed.

Calumet's first action begins in the mixing bowl. It starts the leavening properly. Then, in the oven, the second action begins. It continues the leavening. Up! . . . up! . . . it keeps raising the batter and holds it high and light. Cakes and quick breads turn out velvety and tender, delicious—even though you may not be able to regulate your oven temperature accurately.

All baking powders are required by law to be made of pure, wholesome ingredients. But not all are alike in their action nor in the amount that should be used. And not all will give you equally fine results in your baking. Calumet is scientifically made of exactly the right ingredients, in exactly the right proportions to produce perfect leavening action—Double-Action!

Try the delicious recipe given here. See why Calumet is the largest-selling baking powder in the world. Remember—use only one level teaspoon of Calumet to each cup of sifted flour. This is the usual Calumet proportion and should be followed for best results—a splendid economy!

Lava Love—by Inez Castello

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

BEAUTIFUL Adora Vernon's position on board the palatial yacht Sea-Spray, on a cruise in the Seventh Seas, becomes impossible when Nicky Armstrong, the owner, begins to make clandestine love to her, especially since once-wealthy Adora is now the paid companion of Diana, Nicky's wife.

At Saranoa Adora is upset at meeting Don Carlos de Velazquines, a Spaniard who at one time made violent love to her in London. Don Carlos renews his protestations of affection and conducts the Armstrongs and Adora on a sight-seeing tour up the volcano Pallarosso. Afterward he takes them to his plantation for dinner and again begs Adora to marry him.

A hurricane maroons the party at the Spaniard's castello for the night and in the morning Adora discovers Nicky and Diana gone and the Sea-Spray standing out to sea. Don Carlos brings her a note left by Diana explaining that Nicky had confessed Adora was trying to make love to him. They had decided that in as much as the Spaniard wished to marry Adora they would solve their problem by leaving her to him. When Don Carlos suggests, however, that he send for a priest to marry them Adora indignantly refuses. She determines that she will not submit even though she is in his power.

The Spaniard provides her with a suit of boy's clothing to preserve her reputation and make him forget that she is a beautiful girl and begins his campaign to break her will by forcing her to cook his breakfast. Driven to a frenzy, Adora attacks him with a case and escapes to Saranoa, where she engages a room in the hotel conducted by Manoel da Costa, a Portuguese, to await a ship. Manoel penetrates her boy's disguise and confronts her in her bedroom that night. He has recognized her as having come from the yacht and been Don Carlos' guest.

Manoel is attempting to make love to her when Don Carlos bursts into the room, knocks da Costa unconscious and takes Adora back to his castello. He is cold to her, professing to have rescued her as he would anything of his that had been stolen, then finally breaks down and confesses his love. Infuriated by her indifference he proceeds to the business of taming her, but Adora decides that two can play at that game.

Don Carlos Must Have Come Quickly on Adora's First Scream, Since She Had Scarcely Called His Name for the Second Time When He Stood Beside Her.

CHAPTER IX.

Samson and Delilah.

JOYOUSLY Adora stripped from her the mockery of her boy's masquerade, and slipped her white body into soft, silken lingerie after a splash in a cool bath. She lingered luxuriously over the process and was long in choosing a frock for the evening. She was very careful about the last.

She wanted to make herself attractive to Carlos, but not too attractive. She threw aside anything daring and flamboyant, selecting a frock which would suggest a simple innocence likely to appeal rather to his better nature and sense of chivalry than to arouse his passions. Her choice fell on a very simple frock of georgette, the palest blue in color, with stockings and shoes to match.

Its delicate shade and foamy softness enhanced her white and golden beauty, and made all the more deep and somber the sea-blue of her large eyes. With the frock she wore round her white neck one string of quite small pearls, one of the last relics of her former wealth. The heat had given her an interesting pallor, and she made no effort to remedy this artificially nor did she use any lipstick.

She had a wistful and distrait air when at last she joined Carlos in the living room and found that he had been preparing the evening meal. She had joined him so noiselessly that, busy with his task, he was unaware of her presence for a while. When he saw her he stared, a rich glow risen to his tanned cheek, his eyes suddenly very tender.

He laid his hands gently on her shoulders and drew her nearer into the waning light of evening. Nor did she resist him. Her plan now was to be submissive up to a point, to lure him delicately, to play upon the softer and more chivalrous of his emotions.

"I am—I feel—more myself now, Don Carlos," she said prettily with a little smile.

"You look like a Madonna, with your sweet pale face and your wonderful eyes!" he said throatily under his breath. "And you can talk of me letting you go back to England? You can ask me to lose you so willingly as that? How could I think of it? So beautiful you are that my heartstrings are torn by the fingers of anguish, querdia mia, at the very thought of losing you. No. It cannot be."

He kissed the small soft fingers he held, let them fall and turned away to continue his task over the evening meal, as though he feared to look at her or say any more. Adora felt satisfied and a little elated over that beginning. She believed that his better nature might yet be moved. Meantime, to break the tenseness of the moment, she moved towards him.

"That is a woman's task, Don Carlos," she said softly. "Won't you let me help you? I am not really so foolish about housework as I thought. And, if I am to stay here, I must have something to do."

"There is no need," he said, urging her into a deep wicker settee with gentle hands. "You are too fragile and sweet for such dull tasks. Besides, tonight's meal is all but ready. And, from tomorrow, the native servants will be back. I engaged a new lot while in Saranoa today."

He passed out into the kitchen and returned with the cooked dishes for their meal, the fragrant odor from them pleasing Adora, who was hungry. Also she was not sorry to hear about the native servants in a way, though she felt time would hang heavily on her hands if she had nothing at all to do.

"Of course, there will still be matters of the house to which you can, if you will, attend," Don Carlos told her when they sat down to table opposite each other, as if having realized what had been in her mind.

"A white woman in this country does no menial work in a house," he added, "but she controls the servants, and sees they do not rob her too much. I should be grateful if you would do that, Adora mia."

"I will of course do what I can," she said. "It would be very lonely for me with nothing to do if you are out a good deal, Don Carlos."

"Don Carlos?" he looked across at her quizzically. "Why the Don? Surely, plain Carlos would be better, simpler, nicer?"

"Very well, Carlos."

"In our present position, especially when we have native servants around us tomorrow, a certain intimacy between us in such matters will be necessary. And that reminds me, of equal necessity, the servants must regard you as my senora—a mere matter of form, but essential to silence possible scandal, especially as da Costa—let me remind you—has become aware of your sex."

"I understand, Carlos."

Adora colored. His reference to this deception as a mere matter of form soothed her momentary fears. Apparently Carlos had no intention seriously to take advantage of the position in which she was placed. She could only hope that was the case. She was so completely in his hands, so far away from outside help.

But that he proposed to refrain from making love to her was a matter which he quickly proved entirely wrong. After the meal, as they walked in the moonlit garden, he broached the subject of their future.

"And how long are we to live together under one roof in this manner, loveliest of angels?" he asked her suddenly, his glowing eyes devouring her fair beauty, the softness of her supple shape, the small hands and feet, the gracefulness of her movements.

"Does not that depend very much on you—altogether on you indeed?" Adora questioned artlessly, her eyes deliberately looking up at him, round and innocent.

"It depends on me, does it?" he smiled down at her. "And what about yourself and your share in the decision, querida mia?"

"I can decide nothing—nothing at all," she answered softly, wistfully, playing her game deftly. "You see," she added, "I am so entirely at your mercy, in your hands."

"The mercy which belongs to love," he murmured hoarsely. "The hands of happiness."

"You speak in enigmas, Carlos. Love and happiness are not yet for me."

"I offer you both. I have only to send for my friend, Father Ignatius, from Saranoa, and all pretense will be over. You will indeed be my wife."

"But Carlos—" she stopped in her graceful walk and laid soft, clinging fingers on his arm, her voice very wistful, "Carlos, I do not love you. I have told you so."

"I will awaken it in you. I will yet set it burning in your beautiful body like some sacred lamp which never can be extinguished."

"I wonder. . . ."

Deliberately Adora hesitated, little golden head on one side, eyes dark with pondering. Then she looked up at him.

"Even if it were possible, it would take time," she said slowly, "and I still don't at all believe it could happen. I only know that I do not love you now—"

"Yet—you do not hate me?"

"No. . . ."

Adora was not herself sure on the point. Within her queer stirrings surged disquieteningly. She knew that she ought to hate this man, yet it was but a mild hate tonight, if it was hate at all. It was rather that she was on her own defense! Meantime he laughed.

"Then we have already moved a little way along the winding road which began in London," he said. "I told you there that in Spain love-making is a fine art. I am proving it you, since in London—and again at first here on this island—you hated me very sincerely. And now, querida, the hate has disappeared."

"As real, deep hate," she admitted. "For instance, I cannot hate you just because I am here. That was Diana's fault, Nicky's wickedness. But, even if I do not actually hate you, how can I even like you? You began by treating me badly. You refuse to let me go from here—"

"The last because I feel that I should do wrong if I did so. I cannot send you out into a cold world, almost penniless and quite friendless. Besides—I love you. I want you for myself, for your own good, for the happiness of us both."

"I could never be happy if I did not love you," said Adora, a little weary of argument. He seemed so like a brick wall across her path which could not be pushed down. He made her think that only the more in his next words.

"You only imagine that now. But I would make you love me and the happiness would come. Won't you try to believe that? Will you not try, querida mia? Am I so distasteful to you that you refuse even to think of me as a lover?"

"It is not that, Carlos . . ." Adora, looking up at him in

She thought:
"I won't sit next to a boy with 'B. O.', no matter how nice he is."
Yet, to be polite,
She said:
"Please, may I change my seat? It's hard to see the blackboard from here."

His classmates avoided him

. . . until he ended 'B.O.'
(Body Odor)

THEY CHEERED him like mad on the baseball field—but kept away from him in the classroom. At parties, too, not a girl wanted to dance with him. In spite of his pleasant manners, his fine athletic record, he was unpopular.

Then one day his gym instructor had a frank talk with him about "B.O.," the polite name for a condition people dislike even to mention—body odor. Suggested a simple safeguard . . . What a difference it has made! Today he is prominent in class affairs, liked by everyone. He knows the easy way to end perspiration odor.

"B.O." a serious handicap

In school, in business, in society—people always shun the "B.O." offender. And the worst of it is, the guilty one seldom realizes why he is unpopular. Though pores give off a quart of odor-causing waste daily, we don't notice "B.O." in ourselves because we soon become used to an ever-present odor. But others quickly detect the smallest trace of it.

Why take chances when it's so easy to be safe? Just wash and bathe with Lifebuoy. This delightful toilet soap lathers generously—even in hardest water. Its creamy, abundant, antiseptic lather purifies pores, removes all odor. Lifebuoy's pleasant, extra-clean scent—that vanishes as you rinse—tells you you're safe from offending.

Now! Actually Get Rid Of Arm and Leg Hair

Banish Completely the Problem of Coarsened Re-growth

A Discovery That is Proving to the Wonder of the Cosmetic World That Hair Can Not Only Be Removed Instantly, But Its Reappearance Delayed Amazingly.

A way of removing arm and leg hair has been found that not only removes every vestige of hair instantly, but that banishes the stimulated hair growth thousands of women are charging to less modern ways. A way that not only removes hair, but delays its reappearance remarkably.

Not only is slightest fear of coarsened re-growth banished but actual reappearance of hair is slowed amazingly.

It is changing previous conceptions of cosmeticians about hair removing. Women are flocking to its use. The creation of a noted laboratory, it is different from any other hair remover known.

What It Is

It is an exquisite toilet creme resembling a superior beauty clay in texture. You simply spread it on where hair is to be removed. Then rinse off with water. That is all. Every vestige of hair is gone; so completely that even by running your hand across the skin not the slightest trace of stubble can be felt. And—the reappearance of that hair is delayed surprisingly!

By a total lack of stubble you can feel the difference between this and old ways.

When re-growth finally does come, it is utterly unlike the re-growth following old ways. You can feel the difference. No sharp stubble. No coarsened growth.

The skin, too, is left as soft as a child's. No skin roughness, no enlarged pores. You feel freer than probably ever before in your life of annoying hair growth.

Where To Obtain

It is called NEET—and is on sale at all drug and department stores and beauty parlors. Costs only a few cents.

Isles of Desire by Basil Carey

A Tale of Love and High Adventure in the South Seas

Even as Marlowe Spoke, a Bullet Buried Itself in the Mast Behind His Head.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

BRUCE and Marlowe, bringing their trading schooner, the Helen, into the harbor at Les Ayes in the Pakahikis are worried about a concession Hackett of the Jean-Marie was to have gotten from Van Kloort, the resident governor. The concession would allow them to salvage a fortune in ambergris from Paiku Island, under the guise of pearling.

Their premonition is strengthened when they learn that the night before he sailed to meet them Hackett visited beautiful Fanchon Vincent, whom the natives call the witch woman with the white hands. They fear that this alluring but evil woman has wormed the secret out of Hackett.

When another trader, showing Bruce and Marlowe a piece of the Jean-Marie's longboat that has obviously been smashed by an axe, they are convinced he met with foul play. They suspect Julian Ridley of the Leopard, an unscrupulous trader who will stop at nothing where money or women are concerned.

Carol, Hackett's daughter, is forced to put herself under the protection of Mrs. Van Kloort, the only other white woman besides Fanchon on the Island.

Bruce accuses the resident and Ridley of putting Fanchon up to getting the information about the Paiku concession from Hackett.

Van Kloort counters by saying that he has already given the concession to Ridley. He shows Bruce the concession countersigned by Carruthers, the Governor of Waihill, but Bruce believes the latter's name has been forged.

Carol, fearing Ridley and Van Kloort, begs Bruce and Marlowe to take her with them. They agree that she shall slip away from the House and join them just before the Helen sails.

Bruce receives a summons from Fanchon. Against Marlowe's protest, he decides to go to her, believing that he can wrest from her the secret of Hackett's death. Marlowe warns him that if he is not back by midnight the Helen will sail without him.

Ridley makes love to Carol, but she escapes him and flees to the beach, where Marlowe hides her until midnight, when they board the Helen.

Bruce demands the secret from Fanchon, but in the end falls for her allure, forgetting everything. When Ridley finds the Helen gone in the morning, he starts out in pursuit.

Bruce experiences all the pangs of remorse and finally persuades Fairless of the Spanish Rake to set out with him after the two ships for a fourth share of the ambergris. They soon catch sight of the Leopard.

The Helen arrives at Paiku and Carol and Marlowe land and find the ambergris. On the way back to the Helen they become lost in a sudden fog, and after rowing about for hours bump into a boat which they think is theirs. Carol and the ambergris are lifted aboard, but before Marlowe can follow he discovers it is not the Helen and the longboat sheers off into the fog again.

Carol finds herself and the ambergris in Ridley's power aboard the Leopard. In the fog the Helen is run down by the Leopard. A short time later Ridley's boat encounters the Spanish Rake. There is a terrible fight in which Ridley wounds Fairless with a hobi-poisoned kris. Before Bruce can revenge his friend the Leopard disappears in the fog.

The next morning Bruce picks up Marlowe in the longboat and they finally sight the Leopard.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Into the Cannon's Mouth.

THE Spanish Rake came on warily. Marlowe tacked and turned with his heart in his mouth. A poor chance they had against the Leopard. Yes, a blasted poor chance. Talk about sailing up to the cannon's mouth!

"Let's lay off a bit," he urged. "If she gets us broadside on, it's Davy Jones for us all right."

"Make straight for her," Bruce answered him. "We'll ram her if we can."

"That's a good idea," Marlowe exploded. "Ram her and sink her and who cares about the ambergris or Carol either? You mutton-headed fool, where's your wits? If we send Ridley to the bottom we'll send her as well."

Bruce swore at him and wrenched the tiller out of his hands. Marlowe gave way before his blazing eyes and reckless hands. Bruce's blood was on fire. The sight of the Leopard waiting insolently for her enemy sent him dumb with anger. He whipped the Spanish Rake forward until he could make out figures on the deck of the Leopard. Were they within range yet of her gun? Blame it all, what did it matter if they sank, so long as he got near enough to settle with Ridley first? He set his teeth and wondered whether Marlowe would hit him over the head and turn the ship round.

There was something almost terrible about that waiting ship. They said in the Islands that Ridley never let go till he'd got what he wanted. He had Carol and he had the ambergris. What more did he want?

"He wants me," said Bruce aloud. "He's played me a dirty trick, and that's enough to make him hate me. Marlowe, fetch Puahe down. They'll pick him off as soon as we get in range."

Marlowe shrugged his shoulders. It was no use trying to turn Bruce. Battle...bloody murder, rather, with the Leopard waiting to send them down below. He drew a sharp breath. He had been near enough to death in the past two days to fear it. Life might be hard, what with the weather and wind and the rigors of a trader's roving existence. Ah, but there were things he didn't want to give up.

"Go easy," he said suddenly to Bruce. "The blighter will get us across the bows."

On and on they went till the labored minutes stretched into centuries. How long had they sailed straight ahead in this dogged, defiant manner? Ridley must be marshalling his boys, preparing for attack. Most likely the Leopard would wheel when the Spanish Rake was in range and catch her broadside on. There was a shark to starboard. The gray fin cut the waves again and again. The brute lurked near the ship as though it could smell death. The Kanakas had seen it. They took it for an omen, chattering shrilly as they cleared the deck under Marlowe's violent directions. At the tiller Bruce worked in mechanical fashion, all the purpose in his body was gathered into his eyes. Marlowe looked at him and looked away.

Crash!

Ridley's first shot got the Spanish Rake in the bows. She shuddered like a struck horse. The splintered woodwork stuck out awkwardly, grotesque in its disfigurement.

"Lay off, you fool, lay off! We're in range. We'll be shot to bits."

But Bruce was deaf to the frenzied voice. He held his course towards the Leopard. By heaven, he'd get Ridley for this. The thought flashed across his mind—how Fairless would have enjoyed it! How he would have laughed, exulting in this new, deadly adventure.

Boom!

Three yards to port the water rose in a fountain. Marlowe was white and silent now. He had been in tight places before, he told himself, and come out safely at the end. Well, he'd never be in a tighter one than this. The Kanakas were praying furiously, calling on the old gods or the sea and the wind to help them. Marlowe listened, remotely amused to think what the missionary on Degas would say at the sound of the ancient prayers.

Ridley was finding it hard to hit the moving target. Twice he missed and the third shot tore the foresail as the Spanish Rake dipped in the trough of a wave.

The distance between the ships narrowed. Bruce's face was livid. The passion that tore him leapt up as he took aim. The shot went wild. Ridley shouted to the boy who was steering. Slowly the Leopard swung round.

"He'll ram us if he can," said Marlowe. "Blast his eyes!"

Even as Marlowe spoke a bullet buried itself in the mast behind his head. He ducked, swearing wrathfully. Already Bruce had set Kahiva to steer. He himself was crouching for a shot. Ridley and he fired at the same moment. One of the Spanish Rake's boys crumpled up without a sound.

"Strewth!" said Marlowe. "That leaves us with two bloomin' boys, Puahe, you keep hide. Savvy?"

A dark hand waved in reply. Kahiva, at the tiller, grinned amiably. He was chanting the wild song that the Kanakas chanted in the old good days when they went out rejoicing in the war-catamarans with sharks' eyes painted at the prow.

The breeze blew freshly as the sun slid down the sky. Soon the swift twilight would come, and after that the hurrying darkness. If they were to join battle they must join at once. Who could say what lurked for them all in the night?

The Leopard's gun spat again. Again the Spanish Rake rocked at the impact. Ridley's grim determination to sink her was plain. Even Bruce saw the folly of attempting to grapple. Ridley would simply wait till the ship drew near and send her below with a succession of shots.

"Where'd he get those shells?" Marlowe was wondering. "Those Dutchies over at Filigasta, I suppose. Bruce, we'd best go while the going's good."

"No."

"Well, what will you do?" Marlowe demanded in exasperation. "See, he's maneuvering again to get us broadside on. He's holding the ace with that perishing gun. We can't close with him. And tell me what's the good of revolvers in a job like this? He's done in one of our boys already. He's got more boys than we have. Look out!"

He pointed to the bullet that had lodged in the gunwale. The sweat stood on his neck in great beads.

"You almighty fool, let's get out of it. He's top dog for today. Wait till we hit Les Ayes. Wait till you can fight him with your hands. Blast you, why don't you listen?"

Bruce was staring straight ahead. His eyes had the dull, goaded look of a man bound hand and foot who must watch torture that he cannot prevent. Retire? Draw back, and leave Carol and the treasure with Ridley? Well, what was the alternative? To stay where he was, a target for the Leopard's spitting gun. What could he hope to gain? True, a chance shot might slay his enemy. But there was no time to wait about for that. Every minute that they stood by meant increased risk. Yet it went against the grain to give way, to turn tail and avoid the Leopard's claws.

He missed Marlowe and his heart beat quickly. Had anything happened.

"Marlowe!"

Kahiva shouted reassuringly, and pointed below. The next moment Marlowe's black head appeared.

"What's up?" Bruce demanded.

"What's up?" he echoed slowly. "Say your prayers, Bruce. I thought the last one got us below the belt. She's leaking."

"Leaking?"

"The bilge is coming up as clear as wine. You know what clean bilge-water means, I suppose. Come on. This act's over. From now till heaven-knows-when it's—pumps."

"All right," Bruce agreed desperately. "Lay off, Kahiva, all same lay off."

"Lay off, Biruti," Kahiva sang out.

The sun lay on the horizon, a malevolent jeering eye that mocked their struggles. Between the ships lay a stretch of blood-red water. The sky was darkening. The Spanish Rake swung round slowly, reluctant to abandon fight. Bruce had accounted for one of Ridley's boys. Marlowe had winged another. But Ridley himself stood there, invincible, careless, trusting to the fates that had turned the bullets during the feverish years.

"There's Carol," said Marlowe.

"The little fool!" Bruce burst out. "What's she trying to do? Is she crazy?"

Carol was in the bows. In the fading light they watched her as she sauntered about calmly. Once she laughed and the sound came uncannily across the tossing water. The sun vanished as though someone had given it a push. Marlowe glanced at Bruce and saw the other's knuckles white as he gripped his gun.

"Let be," he said sharply. "You can't fire while she's on deck."

"I could get him," Bruce was muttering. "Yes, I could get him—look, she's going astern."

Before the other could stop him he had fired. They saw Ridley clap his right hand to his left wrist.

"Got him!" Bruce shouted with fierce exultation. "By heaven, we've winged him."

"Bit of luck, then. The light's no good for taking aim any more."

The short twilight, evanescent as a woman's beauty, clouded their eyes. The bright colors of sunset faded under the masterful feet of the night.

"All up this time," said Marlowe. "Thank heaven we're still alive. Draw out of range and then—Puahe, must pump all same quick. Kahiva, you all same good boy. Suppose pump long time, you get bullamacow, get 'bacco."

He thrust his gun in his belt and took the ship over from Kahiva. He'd have a rotten time with Bruce, he supposed wearily. Of course the fellow would drive them all mad with his impatience, his railings against Ridley, his fury at his own wrathful impotence to cut the man's throat, to slash at him as Ridley had slashed at Fairless. Marlowe looked at the taut figure. Already he was finding it hard to distinguish him among the shadows. Puahe was running with a lantern. Soon the wheezy creaking of the pumps would start.

Why was Puahe peering into the water like that? Why did he shout excitedly to Bruce? Marlowe stood up. Aboard the Leopard was sudden bustle and confusion, men shouting, running to and fro with lights.

"What's up?"

But Bruce did not hear. He was straining his eyes to see what Puahe saw.

"See, Biruti!"

The cat's-eyes of the Kanaka had spotted something in the water.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Escape.

"WHY did you come on deck?" Ridley demanded of Carol. "Go down again, you little idiot. You'll get your beauty spoilt."

For answer Carol laughed.

"Think I'm going to stay below when there's a fight on?"

"Stay, then," said Ridley.

After all, why not? Bruce would cease fire at the sight of that slim figure. He shouted directions to the steersman to swing round for another shot. Carol watched him as he bent over the gun that lay hidden so snugly in the bows.

"Have you hit her?"

"Twice at least. I'm not sure about one. Got her where I want her, too."

He looked at Carol curiously.

"Why do you stay here? Do you want to see 'em killed?"

"Killed?"

She walked away lest he should mark the pallor of her cheeks, the quivering of her lips. The setting sun had reached the sea. She turned away from the hard black shadows that lay about the deck. Her mind was in tumult. Not until that moment did she realize how passionately she had counted on the arrival of the Spanish Rake. To see the ship, to see Bruce and Marlowe five hundred yards off . .

She remembered what had passed between Ridley and herself in the cabin. She had felt his strength, the sheer animal force of him before which her plans of defense had vanished into air. The cold winds of fear blew about her heart as she thought of what might happen before the morning. No longer would Ridley fear pursuit. No longer would his attention be distracted, divided between the ship and herself. She looked at the massive shoulders, the arrogant head. She knew in some queer way that his desire had changed in a subtle fashion. She had felt it after they spoke of Fanchon. Till then he had wanted only her. But in a flash hatred had mingled with his lust. She had seen his eyes narrow and glow as he flung her aside. Why? Because of what she had told him?

She leant against the taffrail, gazing at the dead-water in the wake of the ship. The sun had gone. Soon the blue-green water would deepen to black. A wave splashed high and the spray fell on her hands. It would be too dark to shoot in a few moments. The battle was over. If the Spanish Rake had been badly hit she would draw off in the night.

"The end of the tale," said Carol, aloud, "the end of the tale."

For her, the end of the tale would come before morning. What had Marlowe said about women caring too much what became to their bodies?

He couldn't understand how a woman's soul depends on what she does with her body. Carol had lived too much among the Kanakas not to know most of the things that a man can do to a woman. At the memory of things that she had seen she put her hands before her face.

Death would be better than Ridley.

She looked down into the dark water and wondered what it felt like to drown. She had heard Jim Flinders say that once he tried to drown himself, only he couldn't stop swimming.

Swimming . . . .

The Spanish Rake lay to the east. She did not appear to be more than half a mile off. Here was a chance, the last one Carol would get. Between the devil and the deep sea, she would choose the sea.

Cautiously she glanced round. Ridley was out of sight in the bows binding his grazed wrist. Of the boys she could only see the back of one dark head. Now, now was the time, before the Spanish Rake went limping away into the darkness. Carol spat on her hands and put one leg over the taffrail. For a moment she hung between sea and sky, then dropped.

The shock of the cold water cleared her head of the fears that had buzzed in her brain. There remained now only one object in life. She must reach the Spanish Rake before Ridley could bring her back. Very soon he would

Good-looking? ..or almost?

Girls are often unnoticed who might easily be good-looking, attractive, sought after. They neglect internal cleanliness.

For poisons are at work—poisons the body has failed to remove—poisons that show in sallow skin, dull wits, lifelessness, lack of appeal.

Yet all this is so unnecessary! Internal cleanliness is easy. And the saline method with Sal Hepatica is an effective way to make sure of it.

How well smart Europeans know it! Continental watering places are filled with wealthy men and women who go there regularly for the "saline cure." And Sal Hepatica is the practical American equivalent of these spas.

It cleans the bloodstream, frees the body of poisons. Your skin clears. You feel better, younger. And people find how attractive, how alert and alive, how charming you can be!

Try Sal Hepatica for a month.

SALINES for the Stout!

Dependable salines like Sal Hepatica are an almost indispensable aid in the reducing diet. Unlike many laxatives, they never have the tendency to make their users stout. In fact, the best medical opinion here and abroad highly commends them to those who are reducing.

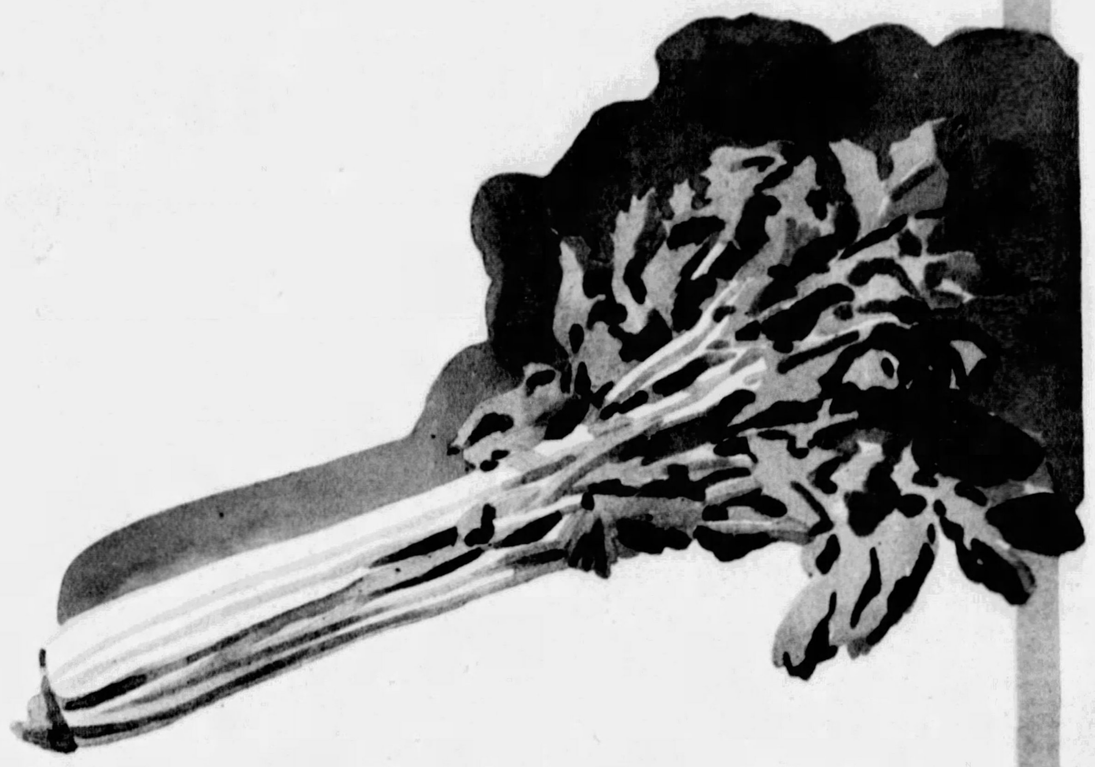
PRUNES HAVE IT!

CELERY HAS IT!



HEINZ RICE FLAKES HAVE IT TOO

—and they're the only Rice Flakes that do

—so insist on Heinz!

WE BORROWED NATURE'S WISE IDEA FOR THESE CRISP, DELICIOUS FLAKES!

JUST look at these golden-brown flakes. They're so crisp and crunchy—so deliciously sweet and downright good—you'd never suspect them of having a serious purpose in life! Yet they have.

Heinz Rice Flakes do the same important work that some fruits and vegetables do! Natural, corrective work—without harshness or irritation. Like prunes and celery, these delicious flakes have a gentle, mildly laxative effect—what is sometimes called a "corrective vegetable effect". They're made to help healthy people stay healthy. No other rice flakes have this helpful regulatory quality!

It was Nature's wise idea. We simply borrowed it. We borrowed Nature's idea, too, when we made Heinz Rice Flakes taste so good. Nature doesn't approve of making foods "good-for-you", without making them good to eat, too. And neither do we! So we've made these crisp flakes just as delicious as other famous foods of the "57 Varieties". Taste them and see for yourself! . . .

Two generous trial packages—FREE!

We'll let you be the judge of the delicious flavor of Heinz Rice Flakes—at our expense. Just fill out and mail the coupon and we'll send you two generous trial packages—enough for six servings—free! Notice how crisp the little flakes stay, until you've eaten the last one in the bowl. Eat them and enjoy them, every day! Heinz Rice Flakes will do the rest.

Children, especially, enjoy Heinz Rice Flakes. And remember—the corrective quality of these flakes is just as necessary in their diets as it is in yours.

If you like a scientific reason . . .

Heinz Rice Flakes not only furnish all the energy and body-building elements of rice, but they supply an essential substance that is found in no other rice flakes. This substance is cereal-cellulose—one of the gentlest, mildest, and most effective correctives known to man—a corrective with absolutely no harsh or irritating effects.

H. J. Heinz Company spent eight years in perfecting the exclusive process by which cereal-cellulose is added to Heinz Rice Flakes. During those eight years, and since then, careful tests have been made. These tests prove conclusively that Heinz Rice Flakes have the same mild, corrective quality that Nature gives to some fruits and vegetables. It costs much more to make Heinz Rice Flakes this way. But it costs you no more.

find out what had happened. Even now he might have seen her in the dim light. She spat the salt out of her mouth and went on, changing from breast-stroke to trudgeon, from trudgeon back to breast-stroke as she struck through the waves.

It was rougher than she had thought. Perhaps it was only the darkness that was so terrifying. She could see the faint stars growing brighter above each wave that flung her over its back. Her arms ached and she floated for a moment, kicking her legs to stave off the dreaded cramp. Her clothes that had buoyed her up at first now clung soggily to her body, dragging at her limbs, hampering her movements. Dimly, she could make out the hulk of the Spanish Rake. Ah, there was a light. Good. Now she would have something by which to steer.

Glancing back at the Leopard she could make out more lights that hurried to and fro. The wind was with her and she heard shouts and Ridley's voice raised in angry commands. She judged herself to be about half-way between the two ships. Would it be too late to make the Spanish Rake? Already Ridley must be launching the longboat in pursuit.

A sudden thought entered her mind.

"Oh, God," said Carol aloud, "if you've got a minute to spare, keep the sharks off."

The idea of the white belly sliding up through the water almost unnerved her. With an effort she conquered her fears and pushed on. Surely the Spanish Rake loomed nearer. Surely she must reach her goal soon. Her arms began to move more slowly. The wet clothes were dragging her back. But there was no time to tread water and tear at the fastenings. She must not stop now. Ridley—Ridley—

"Carol!"

Someone was shouting. She could not make out from which direction the voice came. Behind? Ahead? The roar of the sea deafened her. She was losing her buoyancy. Slower and slower grew the movement of her arms as she slid from crest to trough of the never-ending waves. Presently she became aware that she had stopped swimming. She was pawing water like a dog, in the mere agonized effort to keep afloat.

"Carol!"

The voice came from ahead. She answered weakly. Someone was coming, then. It must be

Presently Carol Asked, "What happened to Fairless? I know Ridley killed him. Did he shoot?"

Bruce or Marlowe or — no, not Fairless. She struggled on gamely, shouting with what was left of her breath in an attempt to guide this swimmer in the dark sea.

"Here! ahoy! ahoy!"

She topped the next wave and heard her name shouted to the right. This time she knew it for Marlowe's voice. In an agony least he should miss her she put all her strength into a last cry.

"Ahoy!"

"Coming!"

She heard his arms in the darkness striking toward her. A voice said in her ear, "Buck up. You're all right. Hang on to my belt and kick out."

Blindly she clutched the leather as she was bid. Her numbed legs kicked out in gallant obedience. Nearer and nearer they drew to that mass which was the Spanish Rake. The stars were out now in their full cold brilliance. Fearfully, Carol looked back towards the Leopard. Would Ridley guess that she would try to reach the other ship? Or did he only see her escape as an escape from himself to the oblivion of the sea?

Marlowe forged ahead, cleaving through the water with his powerful arms. Puahe's voice hailed him and a rope ladder slapped against the side of the ship.

"Can you climb, Carol?"

Carol's hands closed on the rope and she struggled upward. She felt a hand grip her shoulder. An absurd desire came over her to say, "Don't tear that sleeve." But her lips could not form the words. She was lifted on deck. She felt Bruce's arm around her shoulders, heard him saying, "Plucky little devil!" Marlowe pulled up the ladder after him and she knew that he and Bruce were talking quickly. Her dazed brain could not take in what they were saying. She caught the word "North," and then crumpled up in Marlowe's arms.

"All in," said Bruce. "I don't wonder. Look, there's a boat out from the Leopard. Do you think Ridley guessed what she'd do?"

"Can't say. But they won't come too near in a longboat, even if it is dark. We'll head north tonight and throw 'em off. We can't fight as we are. I know Ridley's mind. He'll hang about after Carol for a bit and then he'll go on. He won't waste his time chasing us. He'll know that we'll follow him to Les Aves. Yes. We'll find him there waiting for us all right."

"Why don't we make Degas instead?"

"Huh! Not likely. Do you think I'll give him time to get away with that ambergris? Who's steering? I'll take over. Send Kahiva to the pumps."

"Give her to me," said Bruce, suddenly. "You're wet. Go and change."

But Marlowe's wet arms tightened around Carol.

"You'll not touch her."

They stared at each other in the light of the swinging lamp.

"What's the matter with you?" said Bruce. "Give her to me."

"No."

The other's face darkened at the hostile tone.

"Why not?"

"Get out," said Marlowe savagely. "Keep your hands off her."

"What's got you?"

"You shan't touch her."

He pushed past Bruce, Carol in his arms. There was a fire in the galley and he took her in there, setting her down among Puahe's medley of pots and pans. He fetched a brown blanket and hung it to warm while he stripped off her soaking clothes with gentle clumsy fingers. Presently he had her on his knees, wrapped up to her chin, while he coaxed her to swallow some coffee from the pot which had been heating on the fire. She gulped it down and the color came back into her cheeks.

"What's that noise?" she asked weakly.

"Pumps," he said tersely. "Drink some more. Are you warmer?"

"Yes. Did he—did Ridley get you then?"

"Got us twice. It'll be pumps night and day till we get in port. Maybe tomorrow I can patch her up a bit. No time now. We've only got two Kanakas left."

She began to feel sleepy. Reaction set in, after the perils of the last hour. She closed her eyes and jerked them open again as the cup touched her lips.

Marlowe said, "Did you have a bad time with Ridley?"

"Bad enough."

"What gave you the notion to make a dash for it?"

"I was afraid of him. And I thought if I didn't jump then, it would be too late."

Marlowe nodded.

"Then he hasn't—hasn't hurt you?"

"No."

He saw that she was at the end of her tether.

"I'll carry you into Fairless' bunk," he told her. "No, poor devil, he'll never want it again. I'll tell you about it tomorrow. What's the matter? What are you shaking that way for?"

She clung to him shuddering.

"Can't you stop a bit? I don't want to be alone."

"But I must go. I'll send Bruce in here. He'll stay with you."

"No," she said passionately. "No."

His hold tightened.

"All right. But I'm wet. I'll have to change. You'll sleep, Carol."

He rose, wrapping the blanket more closely round her drowsy body and carried her to Fairless' bunk. She was asleep before he had finished heaping the brown blanket on her. For a moment he stood looking at the flushed face, remembering that agonized moment, an hour ago, when he had thought he would never reach her in time to cheat the devouring sea.

She stirred, flinging out a restless arm. He stopped and put his lips to her satin shoulder. The beauty and the defenselessness of a woman asleep held him in thrall. He drew the coverings over her bare arm with a fierce protective gentleness. How would things turn out with Bruce? Had he, Marlowe, saved her from Ridley and the sea to toss her into those soiled hands? Yet if Bruce loved her . . .

Love, that cruel, sweet pain that tore at his own heart with thin restless fingers, what havoc might it not wreck in the lives of the three of them?

CHAPTER XXIX.

"I Love You."

ALL night long the wheeze of the pumps continued. The four men worked turn and turn about. Just before midnight they lost the Leopard's lights. Marlowe put out sea-anchors. There was no sense in subjecting the ship to the strain of the sea until they had had a chance of seeing exactly how much damage had been done.

They worked without speaking except for an occasional curt order to the Kanakas. The weary night dragged on. There was enough wind to keep them chilled. The flickering stars stared down at them like the careless eyes of the gods.

Above them yawned the Coal Sack, the vast cavern of the sky which the Kanakas call the home of the seven winds. The eighth wind, the north, has no abiding place, but blows on forever across the world.

The slow hours paced away and presently the men's eyes began unconsciously to search for a horizon in the thinning darkness. Slowly, slowly the coming dawn sucked away the gloom from the sea and the sky until gaunt gray shadows lay across the deck. The wind was blowing from the east and Marlowe sniffed it approvingly.

"Good sign," he said, "wind's blowing where it ought to be in the morning—with the sun. I'm tired."

He stretched his arms above his head. In the intervals of rest from the pumps he had snatched a bit of sleep, just enough to tide him over the abyss which lies beneath the feet of the sleepless. Bruce and Kahiva were pumping. Their arms rose and fell like oiled machines. Marlowe thought of what they must all endure as the sun rose higher. At the idea of a mid-day spell at the pumps he shuddered.

The first sun-rays shot across the sky. It was a clear blue morning, giving promise of fine weather.

"Lucky it's clear," said Bruce, resting a moment. "Kahiva stop now. Bimeby, you go find out one two hole all same under sea."

Kahiva nodded. His tall body turned from black to bronze in the growing light. He spat out a crimson mouthful of betel-nut and poised himself for a dive into the green water. He came up, splashing, regardless of sharks. The others leant over the side, watching anxiously while he dove and rose again to cling panting to a rope that hung slackly over the side. At the end of twelve minutes he came scrambling on deck, blowing and puffing with the strain of the search.

"Find one two hole," he said with satisfaction. "One fella hole in belly belong Panita Rayek, one fella more hole in side."

With his wet forefinger he drew on the deck the size and shape of the holes. Marlowe grunted.

"Looks bad."

Bruce nodded.

"I'll go down and see if I can patch her up a bit. No use trying to get away yet."

"I'm coming, too."

They went below, calling to Puahe to find what they wanted to heal the wounds of this ship that belonged to a dead man. The smell of pitch permeated the hold. The noise of wood being sawn mingled with the jangle of the pumps where Kahiva worked again. Presently the crash of a hammer sent dull echoes flying across the deck.

The sound awoke Carol. For a moment she lay quite still, trying to fit the puzzle together. What had happened? It came trickling back into her memory as she fingered the blanket that wrapped her body. The fear of Ridley—the plunge into the sea—Marlowe—and the sound of Bruce's voice.

She sat up and looked round. Presently she got out of the bunk and found her way to the galley. Here before a dying fire lay her clothes, dry and crackling with salt. She smoothed the crumpled shirt and dressed herself. The corduroy breeches were stiff with sea water, and the

No woman should risk unknown substitutes for Kotex

There's health risk in cheaply-made pads of questionable hygienic purity.

THERE'S one time to be cautious—that's when you hear the expression, "just like Kotex."

How do you know it's just like Kotex? Who stands back of it? Where was it made? How? By whom? Is it, like Kotex, used by hospitals from coast to coast?

Kotex is safe

Those words, "just like Kotex," mean much more, you see, than surface resemblance. It's easy to make a pad that looks like Kotex. Far, far harder to make one that meets the rigid Kotex standards of purity, of cleanliness, of perfect hygienic safety.

After all, why take chances? You know Kotex is safe. It is treated to deodorize. It is adjustable. Last year more than 10,000,000 pads were used by hospitals alone — their choice of Kotex should be your guide.

Kotex may cost a few pennies more than some questionable substitute, of whose makers you know nothing. But those few cents guarantee a product that meets your personal ideals of cleanliness, as well as hygienic safety.

Perfect comfort

You have every possible comfort in Kotex. Careful shaping, for comfort and inconspicuous lines. Super-softness . . . that lasts . . . because Kotex is made of Cellucotton (not cotton) absorbent wadding, which absorbs scientifically, away from the surface.

Kotex Company, Chicago.

IN HOSPITALS . . .

1 The Kotex absorbent is the identical material used by surgeons in 85% of the country's leading hospitals.
2 Kotex is soft . . . . Not merely an apparent softness, that soon packs into chafing hardness. But a delicate, lasting softness.

Now! a Lip Rouge That Lasts All Day!

A French Discovery that Takes the Bother Out of Make-up. No Caking, No Drying, No Unsightly "Lipstick Line" —You Make up But Twice a Day Instead of Every Hour!

AWAY has been found that not only gives a perfect lip make-up quicker and easier than any way known before, but that HOLDS perfectly all day long. Instead of making-up every hour, you make up only once or twice a day!

It's a French idea, of course. And in both France and America it is rapidly changing present ways of make-up.

The creation of Louis Philippe, temperamental colourist, whom all of Paris follows in the art of make-up, it banishes all smearing, all caking and drying and ends completely the unsightly "lipstick line" most women complain of a few minutes after making up.

UNLIKE AMERICAN ROUGE

It is called Angelus Rouge Incarnat and comes as probably the nearest thing to a permanent make-up yet discovered. It is different from any American rouge you have ever seen, though its form is the same.

You can use it, too, on BOTH LIPS AND CHEEKS. And thus gain a color harmony that's amazing in contrast to using separate lipstick and rouge—both, invariably, of different color.

Thus you gain the PERFECT Parisian make-up of today. And—it lasts for hours.

No more annoyance of constant making up. No uneven make-up. No caking, no smearing—and so exquisitely smooth that you cannot even feel it.

COMES IN TWO FORMS

All department and drug stores have it now under the name of Angelus Rouge Incarnat in two forms: Regular lipstick form, and in the charming "Little Red Box." Most women prefer the box form. A shade for every type and complexion. Same price as American rouges.

Angelus

Rouge Incarnat

Louis Philippe, Inc.

Louis Philippe, temperamental French colourist, who has made make-up an art and about whom all Paris is talking.

You make up once a day instead of every hour with the same Angelus shade for both lips and cheeks, and achieve the new natural effect that is so smart.

leather belt defied her efforts to bend it.

"I'll have to trust the braces," said Carol. "That's the worst of drying sea-wet before a fire."

She made a rough toilet in the cabin and went back to the galley. The maddening jangle of the pumps continued. Sounds of hammering came from the hold. She stood the coffee pot on a replenished fire, and hunted for provisions. There was plenty of flour and she set to work to make quickbread in the Kanaka way. Into the disreputable frying-pan she emptied a tin of pork-and-beans and the remains of a half-full can of tomatoes. The odor of hot coffee and frying meat warred with the smell of pitch. Marlowe, coming to look for a wrench, opened his eyes at sight of the busy figure.

"Smells good," he said. "My stomach's gone slack for want of a bite. Serve up mine, Carol. Bruce can come for his in a minute."

"What are you doing?" she asked as she piled his plate and followed him into the cabin with the coffee pot.

"Trying to patch her. We've fixed up one place. But the other—well, we'll have to beach her to see it. Too low down to get at. If the sea had been a trifle calmer, Ridley would have sent her to the bottom. I'm telling you the truth, Carol. It'll take all the luck in the world to get us to Les Aves. We shan't be able to stop pumping."

He ate rapidly. Presently Carol asked, "What happened to Fairless? I know Ridley killed him. Did he shoot?"

He glanced at her keenly.

"No. There was a fight—you must know about that. I wasn't here then. Kahiva and I drifted all night. When the fog lifted a bit we sighted the Spanish Rake and found Bruce aboard half crazy."

"And Fairless?"

"Very bad. Ridley must have knifed him with a kris—a poisoned one. Don't ask any more, Carol. It's no tale for a woman to hear. Give me some more coffee."

He swallowed it down and rose, wiping his mouth with the back of a tarred hand.

"I'll send Bruce in," he said. "Not enough for yourself as well? Fry up all you want. There's plenty."

He was gone and she carried away his cup and plate. When Bruce's step sounded on the companion her heart stood still. Afraid? No. She held up her head and walked in with his breakfast held steadily in her small strong hands. He sat down at the table on the locker where Marlowe had sat. When she put the steaming food before him he uttered a curt word of thanks and fell to with his eyes on his plate. He was grimed and dirty from his work. The sweat lay on his neck and around his mouth. His lids were red for want of sleep.

As Carol watched him he said suddenly, "Where's yours?"

"I'll have mine afterwards."

Without looking at her he asked, "You all right again?"

"Yes."

Conversation languished. He thought, "How much has she gone through with Ridley? What's he done to her? If he's hurt her—" His mind baulked at the conclusion of the sentence. Aloud he said, "More coffee. I'll have to go."

She stood behind him, pouring out his drink. He felt her hold away, so that she might not touch him.

"Marlowe says the ship's hit rather badly."

"He says true. If we meet rough weather most likely she'll go down."

She set the coffee pot on the table, and turned away.

"Carol."

"Well?"

He wanted to say, "I love you. Don't let Fanchon stand between us. I've been a fool and I'm sorry. Carol, we mayn't have much longer. The ship's in a bad way. We may never reach Les Aves. Don't let's waste the time that's left."

He opened his mouth to speak, but the words would not come. He wanted to go down on his knees and beg her to forgive what he had done. But he could not.

"Carol."

She turned and her voice was as hostile as her eyes.

"Well?"

"Why are you looking at me like that?" he demanded.

"I'll look at you any way I like," Carol retorted.

He thought: "She's angry about Fanchon. What can I say?"

He jerked out, "Did you have a beastly time with Ridley?"

"Beastly?" she echoed. "You've said it. It's been—filthy. Ever since we started things have been rotten. Marlowe and I have lived with our hearts in our teeth. That awful island! And the fog, and then the Leopard slinking up. Bad luck all the time. We've lost the ambergris. The Helen's gone. This boat's crippled. Fairless is dead. And whose fault is the whole show? Yours."

Carol's Hands Closed on the Rope Ladder and She Struggled Upward.

He sprang up, towering above her, hot and angry as herself.

"Stow that talk. If Marlowe had waited for me—"

"Why should he? Why should he spoil the whole bag of tricks just because you chose? Waited! It would have been a poor look-out for me if he'd waited any longer."

"Well, what's the use of raking it up now? That's done with."

"It's not. It'll never be done with. If you'd been aboard the Helen things might have turned out differently. We shouldn't have had to trust the ship to the Kanakas when we went after the ambergris."

"Think I could have stopped the fog? Cut it out. It's over. All the talking in the world won't alter things."

"If you hadn't stayed on Les Aves with—"

"Be quiet."

"With Fanchon—"

"Be quiet, Carol—"

"I won't. You're ashamed of it now, aren't you? We waited for you—waited in the dark—and you never came—"

He had her by the shoulders, but she defied him. To her he seemed suddenly a stranger. Was this Bruce, this the man who had filled her thoughts and her dreams?

"Let me go," she cried in a swift panic.

"You're jealous," he said. "I went for Hackett's sake—for your sake—to make her tell me all she knew."

"And she did, of course."

"That's why I went. When she sent I knew it was a trick of Ridley's, but I thought—"

"It wasn't."

"What do you mean?"

"He thought you were aboard the Helen. He couldn't understand why the Spanish Rake should be anywhere near Paiku. When he guessed why you stayed behind, I thought he'd go crazy."

"Crazy?"

"I believe he cares for Fanchon."

"But—he—they—if he didn't tell her to, why did she send for me?"

"Most likely she—wanted you."

"You're jealous," he said again.

"Shut up," she blazed at him. "I'm sick of your excuses. You needn't chew it all over again. What does it matter why you went? You wanted to go. You wanted to see her. You wanted—"

"Carol," he said in a strangled voice, "let it go. I was mad, blind, anything you like. She—she's past. I don't want ever to think of her again. It's you, Carol. I think it's always been you. Can't you forgive me? Can't you forget it? After all, most men have their—their experiences."

She stared at him with wide mocking eyes. He went on with an effort.

"What else can I say? How can I make you understand? She doesn't count. You're—you're exaggerating things. Listen, Carol, I love you—I love you—"

She caught him up.

"Love? You dare to say that to me?"

"Why not?"

"You're nothing to me," she blazed at him. "Fanchon? Huh, do you think I care what you do with your time? You're like all the others who come to Les Aves. When Fanchon lifts her fingers everything else can go to the wall. She's bewitched you, Bruce."

"Bewitched!"

"Yes. Do you think I want what she's finished with? Do you think I'd ever share any man with her? Because you'll go back to her."

"Never."

"You will," said Carol passionately. "At first I thought I cared about you. Do you remember when you came back from Degas, you kissed me? It started then. I thought about you rather a lot. When you went down to Fanchon's, when we waited for you in the night, and you never came, something went dead in me. You'll never wake it now."

He let her go and stood staring at a ray of sunlight that crept down the companion and across the floor. So he had lost her. He knew now that it was not jealousy that had frozen her. It was contempt.

Somehow his arms were around her. The hot pleading words poured from his lips. It had been Carol that he wanted always. He knew it now too late. Surely he must move her? Surely she must lose that stony relentless look and give him his heart's desire?.

Her voice cut across the torrent of his words.

"It's no use."

At the finality in her tone he stepped back. His arms dropped to his sides.

"You don't mean it?"

"I do."

At the door she turned.

"Go back to Fanchon," she said as she disappeared.

He swore at the name. What was that woman beside Carol? An episode, an encounter to be forgotten. All his heart rose up in a wild determination to gainsay the truth of Carol's words, to prove to her that Fanchon no longer existed, that he had thrust her from his mind as completely as though she had never been.

He closed his eyes with the pain of it all, and immediately Fanchon rose before him, stinging him with the memory of a beauty that he would remember and hunger for while he lived. . . .

Lava Love — by Inez Castello

the moonlight, knew that she spoke the truth. The silver moon emphasized his height and strength. It showed to her quite clearly the physical attractiveness of his face. His blazing eyes, burning like coals of fire in his pale face, almost thrilled her. She could not meet the ardor, the passionate remonstrance of their gaze.

"The whole thing is that I was left here with you, Carlos," she proceeded, stammering. "What girl of spirit would give herself in love to a man with whom she was placed in such a position? Still less if he began by trying to force her into his arms. And when I remember your boast in London, your talk here of taming me, breaking me—"

"I repeat again, Adora mia, I have offered you marriage. I still offer it . . . " Carlos sounded impatient now, and Adora was rather frightened.

"How impossible you are! You keep on talking about marriage without giving me time to try and see you in a different light!" she said with a little gesture of despair.

He took her hands in his and kissed them.

"You are willing to do that?" he asked hoarsely.

"I am willing to try . . ." She avoided his searching eyes, lowering her frightened ones in which humiliation fought with a Delilah-esque cunning.

"I will help you to try," he said, putting his arm around her supple waist and drawing her to him. "It is all the world to me if you will think of me not as the man into whose power you have been trapped, but as the lover who adores you, who longs to rouse in you the same tender passion as rages in him."

"You see——" Adora placed her white hands on his chest to hold him from her—"I do not know what passion is, Carlos. I have never loved—that way or any way at all."

"The sweeter will be the lessons which will awaken love and passion in you, darling one!" he murmured, enfolding her in his arms, carrying her to a deep settee in the shadow of the veranda, and seating himself there with her upon his knee.

"Carlos . . . " She struggled faintly in his hold. "You are strong and I am weak. You hurt me. You make me feel ashamed. Cannot I learn to love without your help?"

"Can a bird fly without wings?" he retorted emotionally. "You were born without love, and love must be given to you. No one has ever aroused passion in you. So, if passion is to enflame you someone must set it burning. That is my task. What is it that I would teach you first? So little. To put your white arms round my neck and cling to me a little. To take my kisses—thus and thus and thus—to feel them and to live in them . . ."

Unresponsive, she submitted to his lips. That was her only way of luring him into security. It was a dangerous way, for the strength and passion of him could not fail to affect her. His kisses took away her breath and left her pale and moaning.

"Ah . . . " she heard him saying as he kissed her neck and bare shoulder. "You are beginning to awaken. You have at least a heart, for I feel the beating of it. Tell me that you are beginning to love me already, my sweet adored. Kiss me, my precious and say to me, 'Carlos darling, I will love you. I will learn to want you as you want me'!"

She tried to say the words, but could not. She had suddenly become afraid, and her senses seemed to be leaving her. The way of Delilah in this instance was more difficult than she had imagined. The strength of Samson was so great.

"Let me go, Carlos . . ." she begged in his ear, and struggled to be free.

He laughed on a note of triumph.

"Not till you have spoken those dear words" he said. "I am longing to hear them, to know that even in my first lesson I have succeeded as I had scarcely hoped. Tell me that you love me and want me."

"But—I don't. Not yet, Carlos, at least."

"No? You must and shall say those words, querida mia. I will kiss them from your lips. I will force them from you by the fire of my love."

And again his lips were pressed to hers in passion, burning, maddening. Never before had she experienced anything like this, never had passion been so aroused in her. It was folly now for her to pretend she did not know its meaning. Half-swooning under the ardor of his kisses and the frenzy of his caresses, she knew that, if she did not resist, she was likely to be lost.

This way she could not hope to lure Carlos to her ends. He was too powerful for her. He affected her too strongly against her will. She actually found herself at this moment enjoying his kisses, although she had not as yet responded to them. She began to struggle violently, suddenly angry with herself, furious with him.

"Let me go!" she flamed at him. "Tell you that I love you? No. You are making me hate you. Let me go. I want to have nothing to do with you. I only let you think I would because I hoped that way to get to England. You brute beast. If I were only out of your hands, I would let you know what I think of you."

"So?"

He unloosed her so suddenly that she fell away from him and slid to the veranda floor. He stood over her, bulking angrily in the way of the moon, a menacing shadow.

"So?" he repeated, and lifted her up like he might have done a child, holding her by both shoulders before him. He was very chill and calm.

"That was it? You were trying to deceive me, thinking to fool me? I, who offer you an honest love, marriage. I am a brute beast? I understand. You want to go to England. That is all. I am nothing. But I will teach you differently. Yes. We shall try a new course of lessons, one which will be all to my advantage.

"Silence!" he added as she made to speak. "You were left here in my house without my knowledge and wish. It was therefore not my fault. Still, you are here and I desire you. There is no one to save you from me if I purpose to possess you. And I do so purpose. You scorn me as a husband. You shall learn to appreciate me as your master."

With that he took her up again in his arms and entered the house, passing through it till they came to her room. He set her down on her feet and stood looking down at her. He did not light the lamp and the room was faintly silvered with moonlight passing through the bead chicks over door and window looking onto the veranda.

"Carlos . . . " Adora urged frantically. "Have pity on me, I beg of you. Be honorable to me—to yourself—"

"Honorable?" he said hoarsely. "I have tried to be that. I have offered you the right to love and be loved. You have refused both. You and I are alone in this house. You are beautiful and I adore you. I am only a man. I have reached the breaking point, and you have cut the last threads by which honor was held. You are beautiful and made for me, you glorious, wilful darling. Why should I not take you?"

Abruptly he turned and went to the door, from which he took the key and slipped it into his pocket with a little laugh.

"Tonight," he said, going, "your door will remain open for me!"

CHAPTER X.

Conflict.

FOR a while Adora sat in that dark room, a thing of shadows and ghostly moonlight, wondering what to do. Should she run out into the night and jungle, risking death rather than suffer the shame he clearly intended to inflict on her? Frantically, with this last resource in her mind, she lifted the bead chick leading onto the veranda and stepped out into the night.

Then, after she had taken half-a-dozen paces forward, her foot touched something soft and moving and she stepped backwards sharply, sending out a shrill of horror. She had trodden on a large brown snake, which now was sliding quickly toward her, its head uplifted, its fangs making a hissing noise as, before she could move quickly enough, they had stabbed at her foot. And again she screamed, calling aloud:

"Carlos . . . Carlos . . ."

Don Carlos must have come quickly on Adora's first scream, since she had scarcely called his name for the second time when he stood beside her, a loud explosion shocked her ears and she saw, first an automatic in his right hand, and secondly the mashed head and writhing body of the dying snake struck by a stream of bullets.

Carlos caught her to him, and hurried her inside and laid her on the bed.

"Quickly . . ." he urged. "You have been bitten and——where?"

She motioned to her right foot, and he began feverishly to strip off shoe and stocking. He discovered a tiny puncture and a swelling near the ankle, and without hesitation he began calmly to suck at the wound, spitting out at intervals what poison he had abstracted. Then, hurrying to his room, he returned with medicine case and began to treat the wound, placing some kind of dried herb over the place and securing this with a medical bandage.

He fetched some amber-colored liquor for her in a glass and made her drink it.

"That should be all right now," he said sternly as he looked down at her, "as it was taken in time. If I did leave any poison in the wound, the herb will extract it and make it powerless. There will no doubt be a slight swelling in the morning, and you may suffer a headache. But you need not be afraid now. And the medicine I gave you will help you to sleep. You can manage to undress yourself?"

She nodded, suffering still from shock and a realization that she had, but for him, been very near to death. Supposing that had happened far from the house and in the jungle? Perhaps at the moment he was thinking the same thing. He looked down at her sternly.

"What were you doing out there?"

"I don't know," she stammered. "I think I had some idea of running away——"

"From me? You must have known it was courting death to do such a thing?"

"Still——"

"You preferred death to—me? Ah, well . . ."

He turned on his heel, the stern expression vanished from his moody face.

"In a few minutes sleep should overtake you," he said. "I shall come in the morning and see how you are. We will talk then, if, as I hope, you are all right."

He was gone before she could even thank him. She knew that he had saved her life. The aching and throbbing of her flesh at the ankle were reminders of what might have meant death. In her danger, she had called to him. She had to remember that, too. She had been utterly foolish to attempt to run away. And yet . . .

Sleep overcame her when she reached this point, as he had said it would and perhaps more swiftly than he had expected. For she had no time to change into her night things. She lay there in the blue georgette frock she had worn to attract him. And in the night, although she was oblivious to the fact, he came to look at her in intervals of a couple of hours.

He did not touch her, beyond tenderly moving or feeling the bandaged ankle, but every time he looked down on her unconscious beauty, rare and delicate, the white flesh and the virginal shape of her. There was nothing at all of passion in his face, only a great gentleness, a faint sorrow, a questioning hope. Once as he left her to go back to his own room he spoke to himself in a whisper.

"You were wrong, Carlos. The beast ran riot in you. Never again, must that happen. She is not for you, as you can see. You must put her behind you. You must play the honorable man and let her go home, seeing to her future in such a way that she does not know it."

He was working this out in his mind, planning how it might be done, when dawn sprang up in the east to dazzle his tired eyes, that brilliant dawn of the tropics which seems to chase night into oblivion for a while. And when he went in later to Adora she was awake.

She looked up at him shyly, anxiously, aware that he looked haggard and ill as he bent over her to unwind the bandage from her ankle and examine the wound. He seemed satisfied with it and smiled at her.

"There is less swelling than I had hoped. The danger is now well past, but it would be wise not to use the ankle too much today. I will replace the herb and rebandage you and then fetch you breakfast. The native servants have just begun to arrive, but this morning I will attend to you myself."

Quietly and tenderly he rebound the ankle and turned to leave her, when she stretched out a hand to detain him.

"Carlos . . ." She looked up at him pleadingly. "I owe my life to you!"

"No . . ." He shook his head. "I was the cause of what happened. If anything, I owe to you the fact that Carlos de Valesquinez remembered he came of an honorable race. I want you to understand this, Adora. So long as you still remain in this house you need fear nothing from me. I hold you sacred and—as soon as it is possible—your wish to return to your own country shall be fulfilled."

And so, where Delilah imagined she had failed, she had succeeded. Somehow, with that curious perversity so often a part of human life, success did not seem so wonderful when accomplished as when only desired. Adora heard that promise with no ela-

First in beauty . . . and first in accuracy, because of Elgin's marvelous precision machines

LET your gift be an Elgin! A watch of matchless workmanship, created through months and months of painstaking work by skilled artisans. An article of fine jewelry, beautiful and enduring. Yet, above all, a timepiece famous for its marvelous accuracy!

The accuracy of any watch, depends upon the accuracy of certain tiny parts. In most watches, these vital parts are still tooled by hand, the old-fashioned way. But human hands falter—errors creep in—and that is why most watches gain or lose time.

To make these tiniest parts unfailingly accurate, Elgin has perfected marvelous machines. Machines that defy the eye and hand with their unfailing exactness. It is these machines that give to every Elgin watch the marvelous accuracy for which Elgin is justly famed.

A whole year to make an Elgin

But machines, alone, could never make an Elgin! Every tiny part—every jewel, pinion, wheel—is assembled by master craftsmen. So perfectly is each Elgin constructed that it takes a year—a whole year, think of that!—to make a single watch.

At your jeweler's now are many new and exquisite Elgin models. Good taste, beauty, enduring accuracy and service, makes them gifts of exceptional value. Elgin graduation watches range from $14.85 to $500. There are also diamond-ornamented models as high as $2,000.

Human hands tremble. Machines do not. That is why the tiniest parts of your Elgin Watch are made by marvelous machines. These machines were invented and erected by Elgin's own master engineers. The secrets of their construction and operation are carefully guarded. It is these machines, with their microscopic precision, that gives to every Elgin Watch the marvelous accuracy for which Elgin is justly famed.

tion. England no longer seriously interested her.

It became in her mind merely a chill and not too happy way out of a serious difficulty, a means to bring an unconventional and compromising situation to an end. And now, secure from any fear that Carlos might harm her, Adora was not so very sure that she desired that situation to end. Her ankle its old self again in the days which followed each other placidly, life in the house of Carlos actually achieved in Adora's mind a kind of romantic glamor. Carlos himself seemed—in a way—a different person.

They never spoke of the past, of love or any such controversial topic. Their talk was of interesting things and they might have been brother and sister. The old feeling of friction was completely gone. In Adora quite a new respect for Carlos had arisen. He took her over his estate, on which hundreds of natives worked. He drove her out and about parts of the island she had never seen so far. He had a new and seemingly frank attitude towards her which once would have delighted her but now puzzled her.

The truth was that Adora was inwardly in conflict. She could not say that she loved Carlos at all. But the fact that—whatever he said—he had saved her life had made a great difference in her feelings towards him. Also that passionate scene on the veranda had changed her physical attitude towards him.

There were times in those passing days when they were together which made her feel that either she was deceiving herself or he was deceiving her. The complete change in his behavior towards her irritated her. Never did he allow himself to touch her if he could help it. In speaking to her he used now none of those endearing expressions which formerly had made her dislike him.

And now she missed them. She could not understand how a man who had treated her so passionately one night, had sworn to beat down her resistance to him, could alter so completely in his attitude towards her. The time came when she felt she must probe under the armor of reserve in which he had secreted himself. He had just come in from Saranoa one evening, an anxious expression on his face, when her opportunity came.

"There is to be a vessel in port, Adora mia," he said, "the captain of which is an American and a great friend of mine. He arrives in about a week, and I shall be able to arrange with him for your passage to New York and thence on a liner to England. That, I am sure, is news which will please you?"

"I expect, Carlos, it will please you still more," she answered evasively. "You must be tired of having me about here."

"Tired? Oh, no...On the contrary, cara mia, I shall miss you terribly. Still, it is necessary that you should go and I shall no doubt get over the missing in time."

"Carlos...I want to say something to you..." Adora spoke with emotion. "I want to ask you something."

"Well, Adora mia. What is it?"

"Have you learnt to—to hate me?"

"Hate you?" He turned away his eyes, as lately he had been so much in the habit of doing. "Why, querida, should you think that?"

"Do you know, Carlos, that this is the first time in all these days since that awful night when I was bitten by the snake that you have called me 'cara' or 'querida'?"

"The words slipped out now quite by accident," he said in some confusion.

She leaned towards him.

"At the very moment when you are getting rid of me," she said. "And—supposing I do not wish to go?"

"You must go," he said emphatically. "There is no other course that I can see. And why should you now think of not going?"

"I do not know. Perhaps it is that I am unhappy about you. Remember, you did save my life. I can never forget it. Also, you did love me—terribly. Surely, that dreadful night cannot have quite killed that love?"

"Strangled it," he retorted. "Purposely strangled it. That had to be done if Carlos de Velasquinez was to be an honorable man. You did not love me in return...."

"Adora . . ." He stood suddenly before her with earnestly questioning eyes, a sudden gleam of hope in them. "You are not speaking like this to no purpose. What are you trying to tell me, darling of my heart? Has love at last dawned in you for me?"

"I do not know . . ."

She colored richly and lowered her eyes. Indeed she did not really know. She was only aware of a turbulent physical emotion, a wild feeling of his own creation in her, a panic in case he hurried her away before she knew her mind.

"Listen," she said. "I feel this way about it. I do like you much better now. I believe that you did love me. And you saved my life. Really, I belong to you by right on that account alone. It would be cruel of me to leave you if that love for me still existed in you. But lately you have been so distant to me, so far away—I wondered if I had killed it in you."

"Impossible. Don't you understand? What else could I do, loving you as I always must? I had to keep you at a distance. I had to try and strangle my feelings. What was the good of doing otherwise till you had gone? I did not want to hurt you any more, ho ever hurt I was myself inwardly——"

"Carlos . . . If that is the case, won't you let me stay here as your wife? Even if I do not love you now, it may come. And, because of my life which you saved——"

"You think, Adora loveliest, that I would take you on that account?" he demanded hotly. "Never. You come to me for love of me or never at all. I would far sooner lose you, for still I should have your memory sacred within me. But married to me on the mere plea of your debt to me, which really is no debt at all—no! That would not make for happiness."

"I did not quite mean that, either, Carlos," she said, and moaned as she dropped her head, hiding her pretty face in trembling hands. "This love is a terrible thing. I cannot understand it. I don't feel it towards you. There is so much against it—my pride, my sense of right. But yet——"

"Querida, if indeed I may still use the term towards you," he said lifting her to her feet and kissing her hands, "there are at least seven days before that boat comes in. Perhaps even so short a time as seven days may suffice to tell you definitely if you do love me, and then—the boat may go without you. Meantime, I shall say nothing to urge or press you or to influence you. I want you to decide entirely for yourself."

And here the native servants brought in the evening meal, during which Carlos laughed and talked about incidents in Saranoa, and once was serious, suddenly mentioning the name of the Portuguese hotel keeper, da Costa.

"I am afraid that fellow has been using his tongue about you, in spite of my threat to him," said Carlos with a brow black as thunder. "I met him today and took opportunity to warn him, though he swears he kept his promise."

"And what makes you think he has not?" asked Adora, not seriously interested.

"Diego Vendos, chief of the police here, said he had heard I had a lady visitor up at my place. He was, of course, quite within his rights to raise the point. All strangers here are supposed to register for police purposes. Still I could not find out where Vendos got his information. However, I settled the matter with him and the trouble is at an end. He dare not quarrel with me. But it shows you what an awkward situation Diana created when she played her callous trick on you."

Callous, it had been, and cruel—so Adora had many times told herself. But tonight she was a little doubtful on the point. She found herself wondering if Diana had not indeed done her a far better turn than she knew at the time. At least, whatever else happened, Diana had taught Adora that life held other things than luxurious pleasure-seeking. It had taught her, too, that selfishness and a desire for wealth did not bring real happiness.

Thinking back, Adora was not a little shocked to realize that her own plans while on the Sea-Spray were to use her social position with Diana as a means of securing a rich husband. A rich husband. Not, Adora reminded herself, a husband with whom she was in love. And yet, here in the case of Carlos, she had persistently repelled him because she said she did not love him.

Did she not? Adora, sitting with him in the moonlight later that night, studied him furtively and pondered fiercely in her mind. She saw him in a new light. The strength and uprightness of him. His smooth skin, which made the caressing touch of his hands so delightfully thrilling. The dark, rebellious curls, through which suddenly her fingers longed to stroke their ardent way. The firm but tender mouth with its suggestion of passion. The ivory white column of throat and the broadening of his chest where the soft silken shirt flapped open.

Adora withdrew her eyes from the temptation of these things, now violently confronting her. Why had they begun to appear to her? Adora closed her eyes, trying to harden her heart and steel herself against the sensations which were sweeping over her. She felt that she might indeed be in love with him, but if that were so, she could not yet admit it. She must control herself, must make the recognition of it to him a gradual affair.

Fortunately at this moment, on a note of banter, Carlos suggested that it was time for bed. Otherwise, perhaps in her growing physical weakness, she must have called aloud to him to take her in his arms, so intense was the physical torture which was assailing her. She controlled herself, however, laughing up at Carlos gaily as he took her small hands and lifted her to her feet.

"Good-night, little one!" He pressed his lips reverently to her slim fingers and let them fall, drawing himself away from her a step or two, and adding: "I shall sit here for a little while still with matters to think over concerning my estate. Sweet dreams, most beautiful. And perhaps one little place in them, if only for one moment, may be given to Carlos."

One little place! Adora, locked into her room, stared at her own reflection in the mirror. It was not so much at her own magical and vivid beauty that she stared as at the strange light in her eyes. There was something about it which was startlingly spiritual, intensely vital as well. The color in her dimpling cheeks came and went. Her breasts rose and fell under the blue georgette.

"Adora Vernon . . . " she addressed herself, marshaling all her pride in armed conflict against this oncoming physical and mental surrender of hers. " . . . you must be mad. You are being ridiculously weak. In these seven days and nights you must fight that weakness. You are still mistress of yourself . . . "

"Git back, Mister—

we don't want Yellow Fever in our town!"

Grim-faced men, armed and ready to shoot, turned the refugees back.

IT was certain death to go on, and almost as dangerous to turn back. In the rear lay the fever-ridden city. In front were grim-faced, determined men, armed and ready to shoot.

Yellow fever had pounced on Memphis that summer of 1878. Thousands of families sought safety in flight, only to be turned back by the implacable "shotgun quarantines" that guarded every road.

These conditions were not peculiar to Memphis alone. All through the South during the nineteenth century, the first rumor of yellow fever was enough to drive people to panic-stricken flight.

Today, thanks to modern sanitation and disinfection, such scourges are controlled. And one of the chief weapons of medical science in its war on deadly diseases is "Lysol" Disinfectant. For more than forty years, "Lysol" has been a standby with doctors and hospitals the world over. They use it whenever there is a real job of germ-killing to do—in the operating room, the sickroom, even at childbirth.

"Lysol," when diluted according to directions, is non-poisonous—yet all recommended dilutions are sure germ-killers.

In any situation in your own home where you have cause for doubt, play safe—use "Lysol." Use it properly diluted wherever germs are apt to lurk—on wounds, cuts, and human tissue; in the household on telephones, doorknobs, woodwork, nursery furniture, baby's toys, and utensils.

"Lysol" is the most economical disinfectant in the world, too. Every drop will kill 200,000,000 bacteria. A tablespoonful diluted makes four quarts of non-poisonous disinfectant. Get a large bottle of "Lysol" from your druggist today. It is your surest safeguard against sickness and infection. Meanwhile, send for "The 'Lysol' Health Library" of three free booklets: "Protecting the Home Against Disease," "Getting Ready for Baby," and "The Facts About Feminine Hygiene." Thousands of women have found them invaluable in the home. We will send them without charge, in a plain envelope, if you will write Dept. AW5, Lehn & Fink, Inc., Bloomfield, New Jersey. ©1931, L. & F., Inc.

"LYSOL" for Feminine Hygiene

For forty years, "Lysol" Disinfectant has been the standard antiseptic depended upon for feminine hygiene, by women throughout the world. When diluted according to directions, it is absolutely harmless to humans—yet its cleansing and disinfecting action is so thorough that it kills harmful germs under conditions that render many preparations completely ineffective.

Beware! Counterfeits of "Lysol" are being offered. Genuine "Lysol" is in the brown bottle and yellow carton marked "Lysol."

How to Plan a Fresh Berry Pie in May

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

STRAWBERRIES, huckleberries, gooseberries—its now the open season for the open-faced berry pie. And since it is a season of but a few weeks, the home manager should offer its many delights to her family. For there is perhaps no more luscious, toothsome dainty on the menu than the combination of flaky pastry with flavorful fresh fruits.

What makes a successful pie, the pie you love to crunch? The crust, of course. And here's where the first secret of good pastry making comes in, the right flour should be used. For while general all-baking flour is fairly satisfactory, it has too much gluten (and thus stickiness) to make the daintiest crusts. Hence the particular housewife will select cake flour or soft wheat pastry flour for this special purpose.

The next point is the selection of the shortening, and here experts, like doctors, entirely disagree. Some cooks evolve the perfect crust with all butter, with half butter and half neutral shortening, and still others show their skill in chicken fat, or liquid edible oils. But we can say, in general, that pastry made with liquid fats has a crumbly texture, while that made with any form of hard shortening is light and flaky. And this hard shortening may be butter or any other form of animal or vegetable fat.

Now for the conditions of work. Every woman knows that ingredients must be cold, and this means really chill. The best pastry has always remained on the ice several hours or even overnight. The water or liquid used for blending should similarly be iced.

Perhaps the chief knack in making crust is the blending or handling, or, rather, the lack of it. For, as Lady Macbeth said on an entirely different occasion, "If it must be done, let it be done quickly." The lightest feather touch, the least time in tossing the ingredients together means the more flaky product. It is for this reason that all recipes begin: "sift flour, baking powder and salt." This sifting, even to the fourth time, brings air between the flour particles and assures that they are evenly blended with seasoning and the baking powder or rising agent if it is used.

One term of the pastry technique is called "cutting in the fat." Here again experts differ. But most seem agreed to use a flat case-knife or one of the new little pastry blenders which looks like a handle of curved wires which the user may chop up and down into the paste. The whole object is to do the job so quickly that no stickiness or doughy quality shall appear.

While we suppose a recipe to be accurate, the user must be cautious in tipping in the amount of liquid called for. The idea is to just add enough chilled water, tablespoon by tablespoon, to hold the paste together and no more. If there is too much water the crust will be hard and tough.

Rolling out the pastry is another kink not always easy to master, although once acquired it is as simple as walking. With the lightest pressure, and that more in the center than on the edges, roll paste on a lightly floured board to a thickness of one-eighth of an inch. Make the paste considerably larger in circumference than the tin you intend to cover.

Line the pie tin loosely with this paste; then fold back the edge, pull it to an upright position and then flute or crimp this double fold to make a firm edge all around, using the fingers with a weaving motion. Press the thumb close to the edge of the pie tin so the crust will adhere well. With a fork, lightly prick the paste shell on the bottom to help the escape of steam during baking.

And now for the baking, because here again is a crucial point in making delicately browned and also digestible and wholesome pastry. In every recipe the instructions read usually: "Bake in a hot oven." Technically this means an oven registering 500 degree F., held between 10 and 12 minutes. That is for the empty shell itself. The pastry should be a very light golden brown, and never overbaked.

In this condition we have what is known as a pie shell or pastry. It is now ready for the filling. This filling should have been prepared some time in advance if it required cooking, in order that the fruits or other filling would have had time to become cool. Because only a cooled filling should be poured into the baked shell, ready for its final topping of lattice crusts or meringue. If the filling is a custard, then the pastry is always thus pre-baked before filling in, so that the custard will not seep into the under crust and become soggy.

Most berry mixtures require a light sweetening of the cleaned and cut fruit, or a little stewing. Often the least attractive boxes of berries used for other purposes can be stewed up and used for economical pie filling. Strawberries and blackberries, if ripe, require only heavy sweetening before being put into the shell. The uncooked fruits are best topped with sweetened whipped cream while cooked fruits require the baked meringue.

And just a word about this last glorification of the berry pie. Why do meringues ever become liquid and run instead of standing up in a beautiful ornamental pattern? There are several causes. You may not have beaten the eggs hard enough to enclose enough air; or you may have folded in the powdered sugar too quickly and too unevenly; or a common cause of their falling is an overly hot oven. All meringues, even those most delicious desserts which are split open and filled with flavored creams, must be baked in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) for fifteen minutes.

Anyone having traveled or eaten in England is impressed with the deliciousness of what they call a deep-dish pie. And for berries, and stewed fruits especially, there is much to recommend this particular type of pastry in which there is no bottom crust. Any fairly shallow glass casserole or baking dish may be used. Make pastry and line edges or sides of dish only. Pour in prepared filling and cover with crust. This is particularly suitable to rhubarb pie and other juicy berry pies where the juice is bound to soak into the lower crust.

Tarts are small pies and may be made in special tart tins with fluted edges, or in the regular muffin pans, or shaped with a round cutter, and their rims fluted up by hand. If they have tiny strips of lattice paste across the top, they will have a gay, dressy look. Both huckleberry and raspberry tarts, with a garnish of whipped cream, are delicious additions to the Summer tea or porch party.

I must not forget to mention that practically all very juicy fruits require some flour to bind their juice before using as filling. Also some of the excess juice should be removed and may serve as a beverage. Again, here is where the proverbial "pinch of salt" makes fruits for filling more flavorful. Gooseberries, or as the Scotch call them "Grossarts," when stewed, make one of the richest flavored pies or tarts. Cherry, of course, is perhaps the chief favorite, owing to its subtly tart and almond flavored fruit. Plan a berry pie in May.

Stupid Health Fads

WARNING against unwholesome fads and practices relating to health was broadcast recently by Dr. William Gerry Morgan, president of the American Medical Association, in an address before the American Bakers' Association.

"There is little doubt that the number of individuals who believe that this or that particular type of food or diet is necessary to good health overshadows all other types of faddists put together," said Dr. Morgan. And of all food faddists, those who eat irritating and indigestible foods to relieve constipation commit the greatest sin, he declared, for these foods may ultimately set up areas of local irritation that develop into serious disorders.

Dr. Morgan then considered the use of bread. Certain faddists point out that vitamins B and C are lost in the milling process by which white flour is made. This is undoubtedly true, but as bread is usually eaten with butter and other foods that supply the missing vitamins, the deficiency is not a serious matter. In addition, the nutritive value of white bread has been much improved through the use of larger quantities of milk.

A recent fad is one that advises us to give no thought to what we eat or the manner of its preparation, being guided entirely by the appetite. Dr. Morgan labeled this an unsound doctrine and cited as an illustration the decay of teeth of children who are permitted to eat candies and other sweets to excess.

Exercise faddists were condemned in no uncertain terms by Dr. Morgan. Exercise of mind as well as body is necessary for preserving normal function, but intemperance of exertion is productive of great harm, he warned. The effects of this sort of intemperance are often not apparent at the moment, but weaknesses are developed that show up later in life. This effect is noticed especially in causing weakness of the heart muscle. It is particularly unwise for a person in the middle decades of life to overexercise.

tion. England no longer seriously interested her.

It became in her mind merely a chill and not too happy way out of a serious difficulty, a means to bring an unconventional and compromising situation to an end. And now, secure from any fear that Carlos might harm her, Adora was not so very sure that she desired that situation to end. Her ankle its old self again in the days which followed each other placidly, life in the house of Carlos actually achieved in Adora's mind a kind of romantic glamor. Carlos himself seemed—in a way—a different person.

They never spoke of the past, of love or any such controversial topic. Their talk was of interesting things and they might have been brother and sister. The old feeling of friction was completely gone. In Adora quite a new respect for Carlos had arisen. He took her over his estate, on which hundreds of natives worked. He drove her out and about parts of the island she had never seen so far. He had a new and seemingly frank attitude towards her which once would have delighted her but now puzzled her.

The truth was that Adora was inwardly in conflict. She could not say that she loved Carlos at all. But the fact that—whatever he said—he had saved her life had made a great difference in her feelings towards him. Also that passionate scene on the veranda had changed her physical attitude towards him.

There were times in those passing days when they were together which made her feel that either she was deceiving herself or he was deceiving her. The complete change in his behavior towards her irritated her. Never did he allow himself to touch her if he could help it. In speaking to her he used now none of those endearing expressions which formerly had made her dislike him.

And now she missed them. She could not understand how a man who had treated her so passionately one night, had sworn to beat down her resistance to him, could alter so completely in his attitude towards her. The time came when she felt she must probe under the armor of reserve in which he had secreted himself. He had just come in from Saranoa one evening, an anxious expression on his face, when her opportunity came.

"There is to be a vessel in port, Adora mia," he said, "the captain of which is an American and a great friend of mine. He arrives in about a week, and I shall be able to arrange with him for your passage to New York and thence on a liner to England. That, I am sure, is news which will please you?"

"I expect, Carlos, it will please you still more," she answered evasively. "You must be tired of having me about here."

"Tired? Oh, no...On the contrary, cara mia, I shall miss you terribly. Still, it is necessary that you should go and I shall no doubt get over the missing in time."

"Carlos...I want to say something to you..." Adora spoke with emotion. "I want to ask you something."

"Well, Adora mia. What is it?"

"Have you learnt to—to hate me?"

"Hate you?" He turned away his eyes, as lately he had been so much in the habit of doing. "Why, querida, should you think that?"

"Do you know, Carlos, that this is the first time in all these days since that awful night when I was bitten by the snake that you have called me 'cara' or 'querida'?"

"The words slipped out now quite by accident," he said in some confusion.

She leaned towards him.

"At the very moment when you are getting rid of me," she said. "And—supposing I do not wish to go?"

"You must go," he said emphatically. "There is no other course that I can see. And why should you now think of not going?"

"I do not know. Perhaps it is that I am unhappy about you. Remember, you did save my life. I can never forget it. Also, you did love me—terribly. Surely, that dreadful night cannot have quite killed that love?"

"Strangled it," he retorted. "Purposely strangled it. That had to be done if Carlos de Velasquinez was to be an honorable man. You did not love me in return...."

"Adora . . ." He stood suddenly before her with earnestly questioning eyes, a sudden gleam of hope in them. "You are not speaking like this to no purpose. What are you trying to tell me, darling of my heart? Has love at last dawned in you for me?"

"I do not know . . ."

She colored richly and lowered her eyes. Indeed she did not really know. She was only aware of a turbulent physical emotion, a wild feeling of his own creation in her, a panic in case he hurried her away before she knew her mind.

"Listen," she said. "I feel this way about it. I do like you much better now. I believe that you did love me. And you saved my life. Really, I belong to you by right on that account alone. It would be cruel of me to leave you if that love for me still existed in you. But lately you have been so distant to me, so far away—I wondered if I had killed it in you."

"Impossible. Don't you understand? What else could I do, loving you as I always must? I had to keep you at a distance. I had to try and strangle my feelings. What was the good of doing otherwise till you had gone? I did not want to hurt you any more, ho ever hurt I was myself inwardly——"

"Carlos . . . If that is the case, won't you let me stay here as your wife? Even if I do not love you now, it may come. And, because of my life which you saved——"

"You think, Adora loveliest, that I would take you on that account?" he demanded hotly. "Never. You come to me for love of me or never at all. I would far sooner lose you, for still I should have your memory sacred within me. But married to me on the mere plea of your debt to me, which really is no debt at all—no! That would not make for happiness."

"I did not quite mean that, either, Carlos," she said, and moaned as she dropped her head, hiding her pretty face in trembling hands. "This love is a terrible thing. I cannot understand it. I don't feel it towards you. There is so much against it—my pride, my sense of right. But yet—"

"Querida, if indeed I may still use the term towards you," he said lifting her to her feet and kissing her hands, "there are at least seven days before that boat comes in. Perhaps even so short a time as seven days may suffice to tell you definitely if you do love me, and then—the boat may go without you. Meantime, I shall say nothing to urge or press you or to influence you. I want you to decide entirely for yourself."

And here the native servants brought in the evening meal, during which Carlos laughed and talked about incidents in Saranoa, and once was serious, suddenly mentioning the name of the Portuguese hotel keeper, da Costa.

"I am afraid that fellow has been using his tongue about you, in spite of my threat to him," said Carlos with a brow black as thunder. "I met him today and took opportunity to warn him, though he swears he kept his promise."

"And what makes you think he has not?" asked Adora, not seriously interested.

"Diego Vendos, chief of the police here, said he had heard I had a lady visitor up at my place. He was, of course, quite within his rights to raise the point. All strangers here are supposed to register for police purposes. Still I could not find out where Vendos got his information. However, I settled the matter with him and the trouble is at an end. He dare not quarrel with me. But it shows you what an awkward situation Diana created when she played her callous trick on you."

Callous, it had been, and cruel—so Adora had many times told herself. But tonight she was a little doubtful on the point. She found herself wondering if Diana had not indeed done her a far better turn than she knew at the time. At least, whatever else happened, Diana had taught Adora that life held other things than luxurious pleasure-seeking. It had taught her, too, that selfishness and a desire for wealth did not bring real happiness.

Thinking back, Adora was not a little shocked to realize that her own plans while on the Sea-Spray were to use her social position with Diana as a means of securing a rich husband. A rich husband. Not, Adora reminded herself, a husband with whom she was in love. And yet, here in the case of Carlos, she had persistently repelled him because she said she did not love him.

Did she not? Adora, sitting with him in the moonlight later that night, studied him furtively and pondered fiercely in her mind. She saw him in a new light. The strength and uprightness of him. His smooth skin, which made the caressing touch of his hands so delightfully thrilling. The dark, rebellious curls, through which suddenly her fingers longed to stroke their ardent way. The firm but tender mouth with its suggestion of passion. The ivory white column of throat and the broadening of his chest where the soft silken shirt flapped open.

Adora withdrew her eyes from the temptation of these things, now violently confronting her. Why had they begun to appear to her? Adora closed her eyes, trying to harden her heart and steel herself against the sensations which were sweeping over her. She felt that she might indeed be in love with him, but if that were so, she could not yet admit it. She must control herself, must make the recognition of it to him a gradual affair.

Fortunately at this moment, on a note of banter, Carlos suggested that it was time for bed. Otherwise, perhaps in her growing physical weakness, she must have called aloud to him to take her in his arms, so intense was the physical torture which was assailing her. She controlled herself, however, laughing up at Carlos gaily as he took her small hands and lifted her to her feet.

"Good-night, little one!" He pressed his lips reverently to her slim fingers and let them fall, drawing himself away from her a step or two, and adding: "I shall sit here for a little while still with matters to think over concerning my estate. Sweet dreams, most beautiful. And perhaps one little place in them, if only for one moment, may be given to Carlos."

One little place! Adora, locked into her room, stared at her own reflection in the mirror. It was not so much at her own magical and vivid beauty that she stared as at the strange light in her eyes. There was something about it which was startlingly spiritual, intensely vital as well. The color in her dimpling cheeks came and went. Her breasts rose and fell under the blue georgette.

"Adora Vernon . . . " she addressed herself, marshaling all her pride in armed conflict against this oncoming physical and mental surrender of hers. " . . . you must be mad. You are being ridiculously weak. In these seven days and nights you must fight that weakness. You are still mistress of yourself . . . "

"Git back, Mister—

we don't want Yellow Fever in our town!"

Grim-faced men, armed and ready to shoot, turned the refugees back.

IT was certain death to go on, and almost as dangerous to turn back. In the rear lay the fever-ridden city. In front were grim-faced, determined men, armed and ready to shoot.

Yellow fever had pounced on Memphis that summer of 1878. Thousands of families sought safety in flight, only to be turned back by the implacable "shotgun quarantines" that guarded every road.

These conditions were not peculiar to Memphis alone. All through the South during the nineteenth century, the first rumor of yellow fever was enough to drive people to panic-stricken flight.

Today, thanks to modern sanitation and disinfection, such scourges are controlled. And one of the chief weapons of medical science in its war on deadly diseases is "Lysol" Disinfectant. For more than forty years, "Lysol" has been a standby with doctors and hospitals the world over. They use it whenever there is a real job of germ-killing to do—in the operating room, the sickroom, even at childbirth.

"Lysol," when diluted according to directions, is non-poisonous—yet all recommended dilutions are sure germ-killers. In any situation in your own home where you have cause for doubt, play safe—use "Lysol." Use it properly diluted wherever germs are apt to lurk—on wounds, cuts, and human tissue; in the household on telephones, doorknobs, woodwork, nursery furniture, baby's toys, and utensils.

"Lysol" is the most economical disinfectant in the world, too. Every drop will kill 200,000,000 bacteria. A tablespoonful diluted makes four quarts of non-poisonous disinfectant. Get a large bottle of "Lysol" from your druggist today. It is your surest safeguard against sickness and infection. Meanwhile, send for "The 'Lysol' Health Library" of three free booklets: "Protecting the Home Against Disease," "Getting Ready for Baby," and "The Facts About Feminine Hygiene." Thousands of women have found them invaluable in the home. We will send them without charge, in a plain envelope, if you will write Dept. "LYSOL" for Feminine Hygiene

For forty years, "Lysol" Disinfectant has been the standard antiseptic depended upon for feminine hygiene, by women throughout the world. When diluted according to directions, it is absolutely harmless to humans—yet its cleansing and disinfecting action is so thorough that it kills harmful germs under conditions that render many preparations completely ineffective.

Becareful! Counterfeits of "Lysol" are being offered. Genuine "Lysol" is in the brown bottle and yellow carton marked "Lysol"

Add 2 chopped canned pimientoes, 6 tablespoons cracker crumbs, 1 teaspoon grated lemon peel, a few grains celery salt, 1 teaspoon powdered thyme, ½ cup cream, 2 teaspoons salt, a few grains pepper and a grating of nutmeg. Mix well and shape into a loaf. Place on two slices of thin salt pork in a baking dish. Lay a thin slice of salt pork on top and bake in a moderate oven. Chill and slice thin. Arrange on meat platter and garnish the platter with thinly sliced cucumber, tomatoes and sprigs of crisp watercress or parsley.

How to Plan a Fresh Berry Pie in May

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

STRAWBERRIES, huckleberries, gooseberries—its now the open season for the open-faced berry pie. And since it is a season of but a few weeks, the home manager should offer its many delights to her family. For there is perhaps no more luscious, toothsome dainty on the menu than the combination of flaky pastry with flavorful fresh fruits.

What makes a successful pie, the pie you love to crunch? The crust, of course. And here's where the first secret of good pastry making comes in, the right flour should be used. For while general all-baking flour is fairly satisfactory, it has too much gluten (and thus stickiness) to make the daintiest crusts. Hence the particular housewife will select cake flour or soft wheat pastry flour for this special purpose.

The next point is the selection of the shortening, and here experts, like doctors, entirely disagree. Some cooks evolve the perfect crust with all butter, with half butter and half neutral shortening, and still others show their skill in chicken fat, or liquid edible oils. But we can say, in general, that pastry made with liquid fats has a crumbly texture, while that made with any form of hard shortening is light and flaky. And this hard shortening may be butter or any other form of animal or vegetable fat.

Now for the conditions of work. Every woman knows that ingredients must be cold, and this means really chill. The best pastry has always remained on the ice several hours or even overnight. The water or liquid used for blending should similarly be iced.

Perhaps the chief knack in making crust is the blending or handling, or, rather, the lack of it. For, as Lady Macbeth said on an entirely different occasion, "If it must be done, let it be done quickly." The lightest feather touch, the least time in tossing the ingredients together means the more flaky product. It is for this reason that all recipes begin: "sift flour, baking powder and salt." This sifting, even to the fourth time, brings air between the flour particles and assures that they are evenly blended with seasoning and the baking powder or rising agent if it is used.

One term of the pastry technique is called "cutting in the fat." Here again experts differ. But most seem agreed to use a flat case-knife or one of the new little pastry blenders which looks like a handle of curved wires which the user may chop up and down into the paste. The whole object is to do the job so quickly that no stickiness or doughy quality shall appear.

While we suppose a recipe to be accurate, the user must be cautious in tipping in the amount of liquid called for. The idea is to just add enough chilled water, tablespoon by tablespoon, to hold the paste together and no more. If there is too much water the crust will be hard and tough.

Rolling out the pastry is another kink not always easy to master, although once acquired it is as simple as walking. With the lightest pressure, and that more in the center than on the edges, roll paste on a lightly floured board to a thickness of one-eighth of an inch. Make the paste considerably larger in circumference than the tin you intend to cover.

Line the pie tin loosely with this paste; then fold back the edge, pull it to an upright position and then flute or crimp this double fold to make a firm edge all around, using the fingers with a weaving motion. Press the thumb close to the edge of the pie tin so the crust will adhere well. With a fork, lightly prick the paste shell on the bottom to help the escape of steam during baking.

And now for the baking, because here again is a crucial point in making delicately browned and also digestible and wholesome pastry. In every recipe the instructions read usually: "Bake in a hot oven." Technically this means an oven registering 500 degree F., held between 10 and 12 minutes. That is for the empty shell itself. The pastry should be a very light golden brown, and never overbaked.

In this condition we have what is known as a pie shell or pastry. It is now ready for the filling. This filling should have been prepared some time in advance if it required cooking, in order that the fruits or other filling would have had time to become cool. Because only a cooled filling should be poured into the baked shell, ready for its final topping of lattice crusts or meringue. If the filling is a custard, then the pastry is always thus pre-baked before filling in, so that the custard will not seep into the under crust and become soggy.

Most berry mixtures require a light sweetening of the cleaned and cut fruit, or a little stewing. Often the least attractive boxes of berries used for other purposes can be stewed up and used for economical pie filling. Strawberries and blackberries, if ripe, require only heavy sweetening before being put into the shell. The uncooked fruits are best topped with sweetened whipped cream while cooked fruits require the baked meringue.

And just a word about this last glorification of the berry pie. Why do meringues ever become liquid and run instead of standing up in a beautiful ornamental pattern? There are several causes. You may not have beaten the eggs hard enough to enclose enough air; or you may have folded in the powdered sugar too quickly and too unevenly; or a common cause of their falling is an overly hot oven. All meringues, even those most delicious desserts which are split open and filled with flavored creams, must be baked in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) for fifteen minutes.

Anyone having traveled or eaten in England is impressed with the deliciousness of what they call a deep-dish pie. And for berries, and stewed fruits especially, there is much to recommend this particular type of pastry in which there is no bottom crust. Any fairly shallow glass casserole or baking dish may be used. Make pastry and line edges or sides of dish only. Pour in prepared filling and cover with crust. This is particularly suitable to rhubarb pie and other juicy berry pies where the juice is bound to soak into the lower crust.

Tarts are small pies and may be made in special tart tins with fluted edges, or in the regular muffin pans, or shaped with a round cutter, and their rims fluted up by hand. If they have tiny strips of lattice paste across the top, they will have a gay, dressy look. Both huckleberry and raspberry tarts, with a garnish of whipped cream, are delicious additions to the Summer tea or porch party.

I must not forget to mention that practically all very juicy fruits require some flour to bind their juice before using as filling. Also some of the excess juice should be removed and may serve as a beverage. Again, here is where the proverbial "pinch of salt" makes fruits for filling more flavorful. Gooseberries, or as the Scotch call them "Grossarts," when stewed, make one of the richest flavored pies or tarts. Cherry, of course, is perhaps the chief favorite, owing to its subtly tart and almond flavored fruit. Plan a berry pie in May.

Stupid Health Fads

WARNING against unwholesome fads and practices relating to health was broadcast recently by Dr. William Gerry Morgan, president of the American Medical Association, in an address before the American Bakers' Association.

"There is little doubt that the number of individuals who believe that this or that particular type of food or diet is necessary to good health overshadows all other types of faddists put together," said Dr. Morgan. And of all food faddists, those who eat irritating and indigestible foods to relieve constipation commit the greatest sin, he declared, for these foods may ultimately set up areas of local irritation that develop into serious disorders.

Dr. Morgan then considered the use of bread. Certain faddists point out that vitamin B and C are lost in the milling process by which white flour is made.

This is undoubtedly true, but as bread is usually eaten with butter and other foods that supply the missing vitamins, the deficiency is not a serious matter. In addition, the nutritive value of white bread has been much improved through the use of larger quantities of milk.

A recent fad is one that advises us to give no thought to what we eat or the manner of its preparation, being guided entirely by the appetite. Dr. Morgan labeled this an unsound doctrine and cited as an illustration the decay of teeth of children who are permitted to eat candies and other sweets to excess.

Exercise faddists were condemned in no uncertain terms by Dr. Morgan. Exercise of mind as well as body is necessary for preserving normal function, but intemperance of exertion is productive of great harm, he warned. The effects of this sort of intemperance are often not apparent at the moment, but weaknesses are developed that show up later in life. This effect is noticed especially in causing weakness of the heart muscle. It is particularly unwise for a person in the middle decades of life to overexercise.

Baby Special

2 nursing bottles FREE

with every 2 tins of Mennen Borated Talcum

70c value—all for 49c

at your dealer's for a limited time only

HERE is an opportunity for mothers to get two baby necessities, of highest quality, at a bargain price. The bottles are 8-oz. size, either narrow-mouth or wide-mouth as you prefer, and are of the same high quality as Mennen Borated Baby Talcum itself—the talcum that neutralizes acids.

As you know, the baby's perspiration contains acids. So likewise do his urine and his fecal matter. Naturally these acids irritate his delicate skin, unaccustomed as it is to even the slightest irritants. By neutralizing these acids Mennen Borated Talcum keeps the baby more comfortable than he can possibly be without it.

For his Majesty, your baby, only one talcum is good enough—the best. That means Mennen Talcum. Now is the time to lay in your summer supply. Remember that this offer holds good only until present stocks are exhausted. See your dealer today.

"Yes sir! They're Both DRY!"

They're both "dry"—the new and better Texaco Gasoline and Texaco-Ethyl. With the first turn of the starter you'll know what "dry-gas" power means. Step on it. You're away along the level, or over the troublesome hills.

There are no wet drops of raw gasoline to enter the cylinders and put a damper on performance. Wet gas means uneven distribution and incomplete combustion. You don't get the pep and power you have a right to expect.

Switch to Texaco today. The red pump for new and better Texaco, the original "dry" gas—the silver pump for Texaco-Ethyl, the "dry" Ethyl gasoline. They're both "dry"!

"CIRCUS CLOWNS TALKING WITH AN ACROBAT"—By Laura Knight.

No artist of modern times has portrayed so frequently or so well the people of the circus and stage as Dame Laura Knight, the brilliant English painter whose work is well known to Pittsburghers. Not only was Laura Knight a member of the Jury of Award to the 1923 International Exhibition of Paintings, but each year there are several of her canvases on exhibition at the Carnegie Institute. There is a universal appeal to the circus, affecting both old and young alike, and since the days of the early Romans the circus has been a favorite form of entertainment, originating with races, athletic events and conflicts of wild animals.

GRETA GARBO—THE EXOTIC AND FASCINATING SWEDISH STAR.

Born in Stockholm, twenty-five years ago, Greta Garbo made her stage debut as a dancer in Sweden. Mauritz Stiller discovered her about 1922 as a screen possibility and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has featured her in many important pictures. These include "The Torrent" and "The Temptress," produced in 1926; "Flesh and the Devil" and "Love," in 1927; "The Divine Woman," "The Mysterious Lady" and others in 1928; "The Single Standard," "Wild Orchids" and "Woman of Affairs," in 1929. Her first talkie was "Anna Christy."

To a Husband

who has finally promised to part with good money for an electric refrigerator

Now that it's all over but the choosing, you will naturally want Her to have a Refrigerator that will make the Woman Next Door take notice.

The kind of a refrigerator She can boast about and take pleasure in for years and years to come . . . for, after all, there's nothing like settling a thing of this sort so that it will stay settled.

To achieve this happy result, you will need a refrigerator that looks like a thoroughbred and keeps on looking that way. . . one that will do a scientifically proper job of keeping cool season in and season out without fail . . . and one that will keep you pleasantly surprised each month when you pay your electric bill . . .

Did you know that Frigidaire, always in the forefront of its field, is responsible for developments in the past fifteen years that have made household refrigeration so healthful, convenient and economical?

The Frigidaire shown in the adjoining photograph, for instance, offers advantages you would possibly not expect to find in any refrigerator.

That is why we call it Frigidaire Advanced Refrigeration and that is why you really ought to investigate Frigidaire pretty thoroughly before you finally decide which of the many good electric refrigerators to buy. Every Frigidaire Dealer has the facts and the figures. Any one of them will tell you and show you whenever you have the time.

Advanced G M FRIGIDAIRE Refrigeration

Strikingly beautiful in sparkling white Porcelain — Frigidaire offers a new standard of Advanced Refrigeration

With new and striking beauty in a cabinet of snow-white Porcelain-on-steel—and with dozens of improvements and refinements that set it apart from all other refrigerators—Frigidaire presents a new idea in modern refrigeration.

Dishes slide smoothly in and out on bar-type, elevated shelves. Cleaning is made easy by the smooth porcelain exterior and by seamless, acid-resisting porcelain within. Water turns to ice with incredible speed when you set the convenient exterior "Cold Control." Ice cubes tumble out easily and quickly with finger-tip pressure on the Quickube Ice Tray. Vegetables come from the famous Hydrator as fresh as when you put them there.

And how quietly Frigidaire operates! You are scarcely aware that there is an extra powerful unit concealed in the bottom of the cabinet—a unit that uses current only a few minutes each hour at a cost of but a few cents a day.

All these modern features combine to make Frigidaire the truly advanced refrigerator—and to effect savings that make it the truly economical refrigerator. Visit the nearest display room. Find out how easily terms can be arranged to suit your convenience.
